strange thing that whiskey should ever be scarce in Scotland, and Sinclair lamented the days not so very long before when good whiskey was a penny ha-penny a glass, and no limit to the quantity. However, the speaker expressed the opinion that in all probability the prohibitive price was the only prohibition Scotland would see for some time.

Edinboro, the Scotchman will tell you, is the most beautiful city, not only in Scotland, but in the world. Princess street, its chief thoroughfare, is lined on one side by shops, on the other a great natural park, with a forest or trees, and back of it all, old Edinboro Castle surmounts the gentle hill that rises behind. Not only the place of beauty, but the home of education, Edinboro has given to the world many a noted man in academic life, men who like Carlyle, walked many a weary mile to reach that seat of learning.

From Edinboro the speaker passed on to Glasgow, the Manchester of Scotland, where more than half the manufacturing population of Scotland are to be found. Then down into the Burns country to Kilmarnock, where the first edition of Burns' poems were published and then to Ayr to visit such places of interest to every visitor, as Tam o' Shanter's Tap Room, and the Burns monument in the market square.

From here on the speaker took us to points of interest in connection with the story of Burns' life and works as, the river which flows close to Ayr, the Burns cottage, and the Burns museum, and, farther on, "Always haunted kirk" where Tam o' Shanter's curiosity overcame his cowardice and he saw the witches dance at midnight hour to the piping of old Nick himself.

In every case the speaker showed his knowledge of his Burns by quoting appropriately. Then back from Edinburgh to Dumfries with a delightful drive along the banks of the Nith past Maxwellton and Castle Douglas, the stronghold of the Black Douglas, famed in song and story, and now in ruins.

Then on to Stirling on the road to London, the best-known road in Scotland, to Stirling, the battlefield, not only of English and Scotch at Bannockburn, but also the scene of numerous conflicts between Highlanders and Lowlanders. As the Scotchman gazes on Stirling there comes welling up in his mind the thought that the first king of a united England and Scotland came from Stirling.

Then past Loch Lomond and all the beautiful lake country. It takes, the speaker said, some time to realize wherein the beauty of this country lies. To one used to the grandeur of the Rockies, or the extent of our American National Parks, it seems at first petty and insignificant, but then gradually there comes to one the realization that here you can see mountain, lake, crag, and forest, all in one glance, small, but absolutely perfect.

From here he took us more towards the Highlands, the country made famous in the tales of Sir Walter Scott, the scene of that memorable conflict, "Fitz-James and Rhoderick Dhu," past Eden's Isle, till at last we reached the Highlands at Perth and Seane, and on across the mountains to the Glen Atholl. On snowy hillside Highland cattle and black-faced sheep grazed contentedly. Thence on to Inverness, the most beautiful town in Scotland. The weather was in full bloom and the hills were thickly covered and a marvellous sight. On past the castle, where Prince Charlie made his last stand, past Culloden, and over the Skye, and across the Sound to Mull, one of the most delightful water-tours a man can make.

Then to Dundee and Aberdeen-shire, the agricultural country of Scotland. When one notes, the speaker said, throughout the whole of the Old Land the use that is made of every inch of arable land, little pockets of ground in the midst of rock, and then remembers that, with a population of 46 millions they control over one-half of the commerce of the world, it makes one proud to be a Britisher, and also gives some understanding of how it was possible for the pioneers of such stock to hew out a living in this new land.

It is the boast of the Highlands that in the late war some regiments were five times recruited from one Glen alone, and even in the reconstruction, despite much seeming unrest, all are doing their best to carry a share of the burden.

Mr. Marshall spoke of a trip to the Prince of Wales' stock farm in Cornwall and the marvellous country through which they travelled, with little three- or four- or five-cornered fields pieced together like a crazy quilt. Then back to Melrose just as dusk was falling, to view "Fair Melrose in the pale moonlight", then on to Abbotsford, the home of Scott, with all its wondrous memories. And, last of all, to Aberdeen, the home and centre of the live-stock raising industry. Here, perhaps, the true men stood revealed to us. All other things one would almost see were incidental, the pleasures of a summer holiday, but Mr. Marshall's heart and soul are wrapped up in stock raising. To him, as he said, it was to those men of the Old Land, it is not a mere passing fancy, but the greatest business a man can engage in.

Augustus D. Curtis of Chicago, Ill. and Geoffrey H. Bushby of London, England, whom he rescued from death after the latter had fallen exhausted following his flight from within 30 feet of Kilauea volcano during its recent eruption.

The "Big show" happened while the S.S. Empress of Canada lay at Hilo H.I. and many of the round-the-world passengers were ashore viewing the picturesque sight of the Hawaii volcanic region. Mr. Bushby had left the party to obtain a close-up of the House of Everlasting Fire when the eruption of May 17 occurred.

WESTERN ONTARIO BRIEFS
Stratford Hospital Board, at a meeting on Friday night took steps to standardize the institution and adopted a set of rules. A new woman superintendent and an assistant were appointed and a resident doctor will be chosen.

Two men, suspected of being fake stock salesmen of international reputation, are under arrest at the falls, charged with obtaining money from a local woman by false pretences.

The body of J. W. Wood, who disappeared from Chatham on February 27 last, was on Saturday night, taken from the Thames River. He had been suffering from despondency.

HYMENEAL

ALLEN—TEW
A marriage of interest to Durhamites was solemnized in St. Michael's and All Angels' Church, Toronto, on Thursday of last week, the 5th of June, when Miss Winnifred Tew of Toronto became the bride of Mr. Johnston Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Allen of Durham, but for the past couple of years operator at the Hydro plant at Eugenia.

The ceremony, which was of a very quiet nature, was performed by the Rector, Rev. Canon W. J. Brain, in the presence of only the necessary witnesses. After a short honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Allen will take up their residence at the Power House, Eugenia. We tender our congratulations.

McGIRR—TRAFFORD
A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Methodist parsonage here at 5.30 a. m. June 11, when Miss Grace Trafford, daughter of Mr. Robert Trafford became the bride of Mr. Harper McGirr, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McGirr of Lambton street, Rev. J. E. Peters, pastor of the bride performed the ceremony. Miss Elsie Boyce was bridesmaid, and Mr. Clarence McGirr, brother of the groom, assisted the groom. There were no other witnesses. The bride was married in her travelling dress of navy blue tricotine, with sand hat and shoes to match.

After a wedding breakfast at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Elvidge, Mr. and Mrs. McGirr left on the C. N. R. morning train for Detroit, their future home, where the groom has for some time held a lucrative position. The Chronicle wishes them much happiness, and in doing so is but voicing the sentiments of many friends here.

The Final Choice
Several school teachers were recently discussing the amusing and diversified ambitions of the tots in their charge as to what they hope to be when they "grow up."

A teacher told of one little girl who in all sincerity gave her a reply that was not likely to make her vain. "Would you like to teach children when you become a young lady?"

"No'm," was the emphatic reply. "What would you like to do?" persisted the teacher.

"If I'm pretty I'll be an actress," came the answer. "But suppose you are homely," asked the teacher, of course, I'll have to be a teacher," said the child.

If they quarrel and she hold out the pearls when returning his gifts she doesn't really love him.
