HOW COFFEE IS GROWN
The so-called coffee bean is not really a bean at all but the seed of the coffee, which is similar to the seed or stone of the cherry. The fruit of the coffee tree is round and red and looks like cherries and being sweet to the taste is eaten by the natives in the same manner as cherries. Each berry contains two seeds, the beans which are enclosed in a skin, with their flat sides together. The meat of the fruit is valueless, so when the fruit is gathered it is dried so that the seed may be easily removed. The trees grow naturally to a height of from twenty to thirty feet, but this natural growth is checked by the growers, who keep the tree as low as five feet. The cutting does not injure the tree, and it is far more convenient to gather the fruit. The coffee tree begins to bear when it is about three years old, and it continues for about twenty years, the singular fact about it being often noticeable that the fresh blossoms and the ripened fruit will appear on the same tree at the same time.

CAMPING ON HISTORIC GROUNDS
(Midland Argus)
A band of Indians have taken possession of the east bank of the Wye River at the bridge and have been living there and enjoying outdoor life much as their forefathers did. In place of the old-time teepee, they occupy modern tents. Hardly a stone's throw from where they are located was enacted one of the greatest tragedies in the history of Canada, and a few steps takes them to the ruins of St. Ignace, where in 1649 the Iroquois swept down upon the Hurons and thousands were killed, the remnant left fleeing to the Christian Island, while only a short distance away stands the shrine of St. Ignace, marking the spot where Lalemont and Breboeuf, two Jesuit Fathers were burned at the stake, by Iroquois, while on the banks of the historic Wye River a few yards south stand the ruins of Fort Ste. Marie, the last refuge of the Hurons.

THE VALUE OF TREES.
(The Baptist)
Before the dawn of the motor-car age a passing motorist picked up a farmer who had never before seen an automobile. The farmer was duly impressed and delighted. To impress him still more the motorist put his foot on the accelerator and for six or seven miles they tore along like the wind. Then something went wrong with the steering gear and they ran into a tree. The farmer and motorist alighted unhurt on a bank of moss. The car was not damaged. "That was fine" said the farmer, as he got up. "We sartinly went the pace. Tell me this, though—how do you stop her when there ain't no trees?"

GOOD AUTO PROTECTOR
Placed at the top of curves and cliffs and approaches to bridges, a close-woven, orange painted white has proved to be far better protection against automobile accidents than stone walls or wooden rails have been. Such a fence has both strength and resiliency. An automobile cannot break through it, and at reasonable speed a car that hits it neither is injured itself nor injures the fence.
WHO OWNS CARS IN CANADA

Forgot Her Manners.
The fair young debutante was surrounded by an admiring crowd of officers at the colonel's ball. Mambentham, a young, smiling, complacently at her daughter's social success. The discussion was over the quarrel of the day before between two brother officers. "What was the 'casus belli'?" asked the fair debutante. "Maud!" exclaimed mamma, in a shocked voice, "how often have I told you to say stomach?"

ARRIVED SAFELY IN ANTIPODES
Miss Mary McAlister Cables Safe Arrival in New Zealand.
On Monday of this week Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McAlister of Normanby received a cable from their daughter announcing her safe arrival at Wellington, New Zealand.
Miss McAlister left Vancouver on July 2 on the C.P.R. liner Makara, which was due to arrive at Auckland on July 21. She is on the "exchange" list of school teachers between New Zealand and Canada and will spend at least a year in that country before returning home.
The trip from Vancouver to New Zealand or Australia, or in fact almost any part in the South Pacific is one of the very finest that can be imagined, particularly when made under favorable conditions. The lazy, rolling, glassy Pacific, often smooth as glass, with nothing to mar its mirror-like surface but the ever-present "swell" of the water, is something that must be seen to be understood. An like there is nothing like it in the world, wide world. On the other hand, in stormy weather, there is nothing can toss and throw, break and splash and throw itself into a manifold frolic like this self-same Pacific. It is calm, it is the most beautiful body of water that can be pictured; in storm there is nothing more terrifying than the mountain-like waves and hundred-mile gales that sometimes sweep its surface.
Leaving Vancouver, the first port of call is Honolulu, in the Hawaiian, a run of seven or eight days; next comes Suva, in the Fijis, another ten days' sail, and then Auckland, three or four days farther on. On the run from Honolulu to Suva, if the eastern passage is taken, the boat passes almost in sight of the loazy Samoan islands, made famous by the tales of the late Robert Louis Stevenson; if the western route is chosen, then the New Hebrides loom in sight.
The port of call for the C. P. R. boat is Auckland, on the west coast of North Island, while Wellington is situated on the south end of the island on Cook Strait, which separates North from South Island. New Zealand is approximately eighteen hundred miles east of Australia, and slightly south and is, barring South America, about the most southerly civilized place on the globe. The fortieth parallel of south latitude cuts through it a short distance north of Wellington, and it occupies fortieth parallel of south latitude in the southern hemisphere as New York city in the north.
New Zealand comprises North Island, South Island, the Stewart Islands, numerous adjacent isles or clusters, of which latter only the Chathams, Auckland and Campbell Islands are of any value.
The date of man's arrival in New Zealand is wholly a matter of conjecture, but it is known that the Polynesians, in their canoes, had reached its northern shores as early as the fourteenth century. The first white man to gaze upon its coast was Tasman, in 1642. The second was Captain Cook, in 1769. After him came navigators of divers nations, followed by sealers, whalers and trading schooners. English missionaries arrived in 1814, but it was only after many years of vicissitudes with the murderous tribes that peace and Christianity were established. The first colonial settlement was made at Wellington in 1840, but it was not until 1907 that the territory was proclaimed as a British Colonial Dominion.
The total area of New Zealand is 104,751 square miles. Both the larger islands are traversed by lofty mountain chains, which abound in lakes, waterfalls, geysers and mud volcanoes that attract many thousands of tourists annually. The loftiest mountain Cook rises to 12,349 feet. The Sutherland Falls has a drop of 1,901 feet. Rivers are abundant, and the navigation, though difficult, which is the lowest in the world, attests the healthfulness of the climate. The difference in the mean summer and winter temperatures is only twelve degrees at Wellington.
The early colonists found half the area covered with dense forests, and mostly evergreen, of which the Kaori pine was the most valuable. At present the forested land has shrunk to about 4,000,000 acres. However, about sixty-five per cent of the total area is suitable for either grazing or cultivation. The chief products of the soil are wheat and oats, the annual yield of each being about ten million bushels. But the most important industry is the raising of livestock. The animals bred are horses, cattle, sheep and swine, but sheep are by all means the chief source of revenue. The wool clip averages $32,000,000 annually, and is the first export. The most valuable mineral resources are gold, valued at $10,000,000 annually and silver and coal. Freezing and preserving meats is the leading manufacture.
In the state schools instruction is free, secular and compulsory. Reserves of land have been made to take care of primary, secondary and university instruction. The state spends $20,000,000 annually on manual and technical training.
The government is administered by a governor, appointed by the crown, the legislative council and the House of Representatives. The state has no established church, and the Protestants outnumber the other religions seven to one.
Auckland, the capital, has a population of about 82,000.
