For The Quiet Hour

THE ORIGIN OF THE RED CROSS SOCIETY

Everyone knows that the Red Cross Society, which has grown to such proportions in recent years, was founded by a young banker of Geneva, Henri Dunant, in 1862, who had written a little before, a book picturing the sufferings of the wounded at Solferino. But there is an earlier history which ought not to be forgotten. An account of it appears in the 88th report of the Evangelical Society of Geneva (summarized in L'Aurore).

The General Assembly of the Societe Evangelique de Geneve takes place regularly in June. In 1859 it was arranged to have a special celebration in honor of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the University of Geneva. Professor Merle d'Aubigne was asked to make the memorial address and this was delivered in the Oratoire five days after the famous battle of Solferino. The Gospel, he said, was the foundation stone on which the University of Geneva was raised. The standard of Geneva is the Gospel and the city's end, as Beza declared, is to extend the glory of God.

"I adjure you to raise to heaven clean hands and see to it that Geneva shall never be faithless to three causes, essential to the development of man and society,- the cause of liberty, the cause of letters, the cause of faith. Yet there is a fourth, too, which I have the boldness to recall to you,- that of humanitarianism. "We must be Samaritans. Here is no question of controversy on the edge of the grave, no question of winning proselytes. It is a work of compassion, of consolation, of love, to show the Cross and make Him known upon whom has fallen the chastisement which procures us peace.

The session closed at noon. The address had made a great impression. In the evening a gathering was held at Monchoisy in one of the patrician homes of the late eighteenth century. The newspapers were full of the sufferings of the wounded in the Franco-Italian War. Something must be done. A collection was taken of $400,-much money for that day. Then three young men, one French, the other two Belgians,-Estrabaud, Koehne and Wautier, who had just finished their studies in theology,-put themselves under the direction of M. Charpiot, a French evangelist, and started by diligence from Mont Cenis. In three days they were on the fighting line. For two months these pioneers of the Red Cross movement tended the wounded with the devotion which had characterized their successors in later days. When the war was over they returned to Geneva and in a meeting presided over by M. Adolphe Naville, father of the present president of the Swiss Red Cross, Professor Edouard Naville, they related their experiences. Their testimony preceding somewhat the book by M. Henri Dunant, contributed to the creation of the Convention Internationale de Geneve and of the Society of the Red Cross.

I thank Thee, Lord, for mine unanswered prayers Unanswered save Thy quiet, kindly "Nay"; Yet it seemed hard among my heavy cares That bitter day.

I wanted joy; but Thou didst know for me That sorrow was the gift I needed most, And in its mystic depths I learned to see The Holy Ghost

I wanted health; but Thou didst bid me sound The secret treasuries of pain. And in the means and greans my heart oft found The Christ again.

I wanted wealth: 'twas not the better part; There is a wealth with poverty oft given, And Thou didst teach me of the gold of heart, Best gift of heaven.

I thank Thee, Lord, for those unanswered prayers, And for Thy word, the quiet, kindly "Nay." Twas Thy witholding lightened all my cares That blessed day.

-Oliver Huckel.

DR. TREVOR DAVIES CALLED ATTENTION THE OTHER DAY in a lecture at the Margaret Eaton School to a point that is too often fergotten. He remarked that nothing concerns him so much at the present time as the absence of the songster in our midst, meaning thereby not the poet or the reveller, but the individual who, having experienced the presence of the Spirit of God expresses his joy in hymns. Dr. Davies remarked that it was the fact of religious poetry and hymns which described and pendered on the greatness of God that distinguishes the Christian church from all other devotional societies. In particular, it is worthy of note that heathen religions have no hymn books. Songs of praise are altogether foreign to the devotions of other faiths, and it is only in Christianity that real ov is experienced and poetically expressed. This is really one of the simplest and yet one of the most significant evidences of Christianity. The joylessness of heathenism is in marked contrast to "the joy of the Lord" as seen in true Christianity.

SIR ROBERT BLAIR, EDUCATION OFFICER TO THE LONDON (England) County Council, has just retired, and in an address in which he reviewed the work done during his time, he emphasized the need of "sympathetic discipline" on the part of the teacher. On being asked for an illustration of this, he told of a woman teacher in charge of a class of troublesome boys:

Somebody had written obscene words on the blackboard. Unlike the master of old, she did not thrash a pupil-who might or might not have been the culprit-but she asked the class to explain the meaning of the words. When no answer was forthcoming from the shamed and confused youngsters, she said: "Very well, I will ask my brother tonight, and will tell you tomorrow." There was a howl of protest at thisand the class never transgressed again.

A MISSIONARY TO THE MOSLEMS HAS JUST POINTED OUT the way in which that religious system cannot do anything to uplift a devotee beyond the standard of its founder.

It is a commonplace saying that a stream cannot rise higher than its source, and it is equally true of Islam that it cannot raise a Moslem beyond the standard of its founder. Mohammed is the example ever before the Moslems, and they are true reproductions of him both in the nobler and the baser aspects of his character. Mohammed set an example when he freely practiced polygamy, that has left an indelible stain down at the centuries since; an exemple that today reduces women to the position, in the case of the rich, of playthings and toys of husbands, and, in the case of the poor, of slaves and drudges. It is true that Mohammed in some ways improved the lot of women in Arabia and abolished such degrading customs as the burial of female infants alive, but, when all has been allowed for, the fact remains that he himself succumbed to the influence of his environment, and in his life and teaching reflected the period in which he lived.

The saying that a stream cannot rise higher than its source has a very striking application to Christianity, for in this case not only can the stream not rise higher than its source, but it cannot reach so far. Christ is always higher than the very best of His followers, and it is in this that Christianity finds both aspiration and inspiration.

THE JAPANESE IN CALIFORNIA HAVE BEEN EMIGRATING TO Utah and Southern Idaho, as they are permitted to buy land in these states for farming purposes. There are six thousand of them in these two states alone and the Presbyterian and Congregationalist churches are to undertake in common a religious work among them.
