Mr. Ritchie holds a high and responsible position as Township treasurer of Glenelg, an office which he fills with ability in successor to his good departed father-in-law, the late lamented Mr. Daniel Edge. Mr Ritchie's grandfather, the late James Edge, ocupied the position for some twenty-five years of more. Going back again to Priceville we find a good correspondent from there also. We do not know who he is but he can give all matters relating

We have been a reader of The Durham Chronicle since White and Johnston were editors. We also remember reading the Durham fortunes would vary; they might be Standard edited by the late S. L. Luke in 1857. The present Chronicle editor didn't learn his A. B. C's then. Mr. Luke was a good compositor but unfortunately he had his own failures.

spells either backwards or forward the same way. The persons giving the name at first called it Glen. As there are many glens and hollows to be found in general, and then after consideration "elg" was added to the Glen. To the visitors and residents it is easily seen what Glen means but we do not know what the "elg" means. The late Malcolm McPhee of Normanby said it originated from the Gaelic word "Gleannseilg" or "Hunting Glen", but it looks more like a fishing glen as in days of yore the old Saugeen river supplied abundant quantity to those engaged in angling. In the early history of the townships in the county of Grey early settlers went down to the old settlements in the time of harvesting. A young lad went down from the vicinity of Priceville looking for work. He came to the farm of an old "Scot," in the township of Vaughan, county of York, and asked him if he wanted to hire a man. "Eh!" is it looking for work ye are. my laddie?" "Yes," was the reply. "Where did ye come from?" come from the county of Grey," was the answer. "And what point of the county of Grey ve cam from?" From the township of Glenelg," was the reply by the boy. And in the old highland tongue he said." Agus an ne sin Gleneilg nan clach," or in everybody's language he said, "Is that stony Glenelg?" But if Glenelg had stones then, the old Scot's heart was as hard as the nether mill stone for he never asked the poor boy if he was in the habit of eating as it was dinner time, but we vouch for the good residents of Glenelg that they would not allow a person, old or young, to pass without inviting them to partake of food at their disposa In passing the different lines in Glenelg, the traveller will see some of the aged veterans' work in some of the old hewed log dwellings which were in general substituted by fine brick residences. In many instances | nothing but the walls of the old & buildings are to be seen; the corners show the handy work of the old corner men, which are as straight and firm as ever in many instances. There are hardly any to be found who took pride in making the building workmanlike sixty or seventy years ago. The faithful, aged veteran, Mr. J. S. Black, in the days of his youth when a young man's work might be seen in some of those old buildings, was as good at the axe as he was at the pen for forty years a faithful servant of Glenelg. But we visit the many cemeteries in Glenelg and vicinity and we find most of those who braved the woods on marble slabs hardly readable by being covered with moss. To those of us who saw the month of August twice forty times return it seems a dream and could the veterans now past the meridian of life enumerate the many changes that have intervened from that far away date to this August 25, 1924, it would take more than a pad of printers' paper to contain it. The passing of the many years since the aged's boyhood the expression is suitable. I was
