THE MAIDEN'S PRAYER

(By Bill Rendered)

Oh, Lord, send me a man that is just awfully nice, and let him whisper those three little words to me, and place a diamond upon my finger that will be the envy of every girl who hasn't one.

Let me have a little party and announce my engagement to the girls, the maid of honor, and those who will be the bridesmaids.

Let me have a wedding and invite those that I wish and snub those who have snubbed me. Let me give to several girls, including one that has a very expensive car, the privilege of delivering the invitations.

And after the wedding and reception are both over and the guests have all gone and my husband takes me in his arms and kisses me while we wait for the car that is to convey us to the railway station and the train on which we will embark for our honeymoon—after all this, dear Lord, why, just leave the rest to me. Amen.—Judge.

'PROVES' EARTH SAFE FOR SEVERAL BILLION YEARS

The earth, which was scheduled to blow up last Friday night, is going to last about a thousand million million years. This is vouched for by Professor Ray Moulton of the department of astronomy of the University of Chicago.

This is the way Professor Moulton explains his theory: "Once every thousand million million years' one sun passes another, and there is chaos. The universe existing in the neighborhood of the colliding suns is wrecked. A spiral of stars is formed from the wreckage, and eventually a new universe is brought into being."

Astronomers estimate that such a catastrophe happened to the stars some 5,000,000,000,000 years ago. Hence, with an ordinary run of luck, the lightning shouldn't strike again for several million years."

THE KIDDIES' PARTY

Don't dress up the children so that they are afraid to move about and play. Don't lead them up with rich, unwholesome food, which means trouble for all when the party is over. Don't invite very small children with older ones—neither enjoy it. Give them each their own little affair.

Don't have valuable ornaments about that may get broken. Don't give celluloid toys, explosive balloons or "sparkling" crackers. Don't force small girls to play with small boys if they don't want to. Don't keep up the party till a late hour—let the youngsters leave while they are fresh and happy.

THE MEDICAL PAD—CUTTING OUT TONSILS

(The Baltimore Sun)

Tonsils are born and not made. This distinguishes them from adenoids, which grow on the premises. In the beginning, tonsils had some serious mission which concerned the welfare of the owner, but their present function is to provide closed cars for gentlemen who like to whistle. Tonsils were not discovered until an operation for appendicitis became too common to confer social distinction.

The modern plan affords the owner of the tonsils much more entertainment. He is placed in a chair, his jaws are pried apart, and a portion of rubber boot is inserted to hold them ajar and discourage conversation on the part of the patient.

THE HOCKEY FAN

J. Orlando (Bones) Livingstone, who hurls a wicked typewriter for the Grimby Independent, says: "Like all other sport fans, the hockey fan is a cruel, thoughtless being."

He is expected of the clown of the drama, the hockey player must play his best, to the full extent of his strength and ability, all the time, even if his heart were breaking or his health impaired.

After this, Beatty lost touch with the German Fleet through running north, and was unable to give Jellicoe vital information as to where the enemy fleet was.

He Got a Chair

A rain-soaked traveller stopped into the office of the leading hotel, and finding no chance to get near the stove owing to the usual crowd around it, said to the landlord, "Can you take about a quart of good hot soup to my horse?"

By this time, those in the room had begun to be curious and fell in line behind the proprietor with the bowl of soup, following him out to the sheds to see the wonderful horse that would eat soup.

The writer regrets that Lord Beatty did not say a few words to instruct public opinion when Lord Jellicoe was being attacked.

NOW COMES JELICOE VINDICATOR

Commander of Dover Patrol Defends Jellicoe's Action, Indulges in Strictures on Beatty, and Disagrees With "Fore Top."

In a recent issue, an article appeared by "Fore Top" dealing with the Battle of Jutland. The writer of that article was inclined to the belief that the failure of the British Fleet to crush the German fleet was due to Lord Jellicoe's hesitation in closing with the enemy as a result of an exaggerated belief in the strength of the German torpedoes and under-water craft.

Now comes a vindication of Jellicoe and a criticism of Beatty in a book, entitled, "The Jutland Scandal," by Admiral Sir Reginald Bacon, who was at the time of the Battle of Jutland in command of the Dover Patrol.

The general notion in the public mind about the battle is that Beatty met and daringly engaged the enemy and drew them into a trap, the British admiral knowing the Grand Fleet was coming up.

Lord Beatty was merely a junior admiral commanding a cruiser squadron, explains Sir Reginald Bacon. His most important duty was to convey information to the Commander-in-Chief as to the exact position of the German Fleet.

Between 6.55 and 7.12, Admiral Beatty had been having a little circle turning of his own.

But at all events, Admiral Beatty, far from leading the Germans into a trap from which there was no escape, was busily trying to straighten out confusion among his cruisers.

Let us be quite frank, says Admiral Bacon. The battle-cruisers steamed away at high speed from the German battle fleet and left the 5th Battle Squadron to fight them.

The writer regrets that Lord Beatty did not say a few words to instruct public opinion when Lord Jellicoe was being attacked.

Admiral Bacon contends the commonly held opinion that had Beatty been in command at Jutland, we should have had a crushing victory.

No one wishes to pretend that Jutland was a glorious victory, he adds. It was not. No glorious victory was possible under the daylight conditions that prevailed.

If it be asked, "Why did the Germans escape after all?" Admiral Bacon is ready with an answer, says Mr. Hurd.

Here were two battleships with every signalling appliance and with experienced officers of rank in command, but who never informed the Commander-in-Chief, nor even their own admiral, that the enemy was breaking through the German Fleet.

The escape of the German Fleet must be attributed largely to the failure of the officers commanding these two ships to pass such vital information to the admiral.

Masons generally will be interested in a letter sent recently by Rudyard Kipling in reply to an inquiry concerning his Masonic experiences.

MRS. NEW, NURSE

While I was visiting friends on a farm, writes a contributor, the girls came in one morning, laughing, and told me that if I would go to the barn and climb into the hay-loft, I might see a curious sight.

The floor of the loft was covered thickly with fragrant hay, and in one corner, a broody hen had made a stolen nest and was trying to set. No eggs had been allowed her, however, and, since she had no family of her own on which to bestow her maternal affection, she had taken an interest in the family of a neighbor, the old house cat.

The girls said that when Mother Pussy left the kittens alone, as she was forced to do at times, the hen always caled the kittens to her nest and hovered them. When the kittens were hungry, they had to scramble back to their mother.

Pussy should have been grateful, for the hen made a safe and attentive nurse; and perhaps the cat was grateful, for apparently she did not object to the ministrations of her neighbor.
