ACCOUNTS SENT OUT

During the past week, a big batch of accounts owing on subscriptions have been sent out from THE CHRONICLE office, and quite naturally, we are expecting a liberal response to our request for funds in order that we may better carry on our work.

In a good many instances the amounts are not large, and some of our readers may wonder that they have been rendered a statement. These small accounts are all right, but when it is considered that we have two or three hundred such, we think our readers will see the reasonableness of our request, as in the aggregate, they amount to quite a considerable sum.

It is our intention to turn out the best paper it is in our power to do, but like everything else commercially, we cannot carry on successfully without monetary remuneration for our efforts. From time to time, as conditions warrant, THE CHRONICLE will, as in the past, continue to keep up with the times, but this cannot be done without full co-operation between our readers and ourselves.

We would, therefore, ask all who have received these statements to remit as soon as possible, and in meeting their obligations with us, we, in turn, shall be able to meet the many demands upon us by wholesalers and others. We thank you.
