THE SECRET

A few years ago in a city where politics had always been corrupt, a man was elected mayor who had come up from grinding poverty, through many trials, to that place of high honor and responsibility.

So they approached the new mayor with confidence; tactfully, and with carefully veiled suggestions. He very quietly ignored everything of the kind.

In despair, one of the plotters went to the mayor's cousin, who was a saloon keeper in the same city.

Mud taxes or gas taxes? Users of Ontario highways in years gone by paid a heavy tribute to mud roads.

The mud taxes were more burdensome than any conceivable gasoline tax ever will be. Not one automobile or truck owner would exchange Ontario road conditions, with a gas tax, for the conditions of ten years ago when there was no gas tax.

The gasoline tax reminds you that as a user of the road you are expected to help pay construction and maintenance costs. As a practical measure, road building must have definite financial support.

In making this situation familiar to all motorists, the Government is requesting co-operation in maintaining the good condition of the roads by the sane and intelligent use of them.

Care of the roads falls into the hands of the public as well as of the road authorities. Repairs are made by the authorities, but the need for repairs can be deferred by reasonable loading and sane driving.

A NEWSPAPER'S SERVICE

We often wonder what per cent of the readers of any newspaper and particularly of a live, wide-awake popular family newspaper really form any conception of the actual service to humanity performed by the industrious, intelligent editor.

He gives practically in one way or another all his waking hours to his newspaper readers. We are told that the ideal of service—real service—is not a kind of stock-in-trade that can be merchandised in the open market.

It accompanies a commodity, yet is not a part of the purchase. It bears no price tag, but is given without expectation of the reward, indimensionable, intangible, it is almost indefinable.

It consists in part of contributed intelligence, experience and judgment, of counsel, unselfish, sincere, of profitable ideas and suggestions, of extra painstaking for correctness in detail that might not be noticed.
