PORT HOPE FARMER FINDS R.O.P. POULTRY PROFITABLE SIDE LINE

Poultry husbandry is one of the most profitable branches of farming provided that the right class of stock is used, in the opinion of Mr. Ted Mills of Port Hope, Ontario. Mr. Mills crops two farms, runs a few dairy cows and keeps a small but efficient flock of Record of Performance bred White Leghorns, and states that in proportion to the investment, his poultry is much the most profitable part of his farm.

Each year Mr. Mills secures chicks from a Record of Performance breeder in his own district. The birds from which his chicks come have been trapped under government supervision, and their records are officially certified. Two classes of certificates are issued, ordinary certificates for birds which lay from 150 to 225 eggs in a year and advanced certificates for birds which lay from 150 to 225 eggs provided in all cases that the eggs average over two ounces in weight. Mr. Mills is thus assured that his chicks come from good parent stock and that egg weight has been given careful consideration in the breeding, an important point in the sale of graded eggs. Further, the breeder's flock has been carefully inspected for disease, and the general management and breeding methods employed by the owner have been approved by a trained government inspector.

Mr. Mills expressed his views on poultry and the value of Record of Performance to the general farmer working in an almost immaculately clean brooder house in which were two hundred sturdy young chicks, themselves ample testimony to the worth of R. O. P. stock.

"We have been running R. O. P. poultry for the past four years," he said. "Before that time, we had a bunch of hens of our own breeding. Naturally, we thought they were good, but I guess we didn't know what good chickens were in those days. After all, we've only so long to live in this world, and we may as well have the best there is while we are here.

"It is not difficult to say why I prefer R. O. P. stock. I get it because I can depend on it. I know that the birds from which mine have come have secured official records, and that the government stands back of the records, and I can be sure that nothing is being put over me. The cost, of course, may be a little higher than with other stock, but our experience has shown that R. O. P. birds return the initial cost many times over.

"What I have done any other farmer can do. I am not a poultry specialist, but I am making poultry a strong side line. There are, of course, two ways in which a farmer can improve his stock through using R. O. P. birds. He can buy R. O. P. cockerels, which have been approved by government inspectors and which came up to the standard the government has set for good breeding males. Or he can purchase his chicks or hatching eggs from an R. O. P. breeder and thus be sure that all his stock will be of the best possible breeding.

Mr. Mills look another look at the two hundred balls of energy running around in his house. "They are two weeks old," he said. "I've lost just nine of them. And you can see yourself that there aren't going to be many more die. Just one thing wrong with that bunch. I should have another house full of them."

POULTRY LICE AND MITES

At this period of the year, vermin, unless controlled, multiply very rapidly, says J. H. McConnell, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

The fowls at the central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, are treated periodically for lice. Blue ointment to which two parts of lard have been added, is used to kill the lice and mites. The addition of little tallow will give more base. This ointment is applied to the skin beneath the vent and under the wings. Fowls treated in this cheap and effective manner will remain free from lice for several months unless exposed to further infestation. Blue ointment should not be used on sitting hens until after the hatch. The fumes from the ointment will kill the germ in the egg.

Unsanitary poultry houses encourage the most troublesome of vermin, the red mite. These mites get their fill of blood at night and leave the fowl before dawn, to hide in cracks and crevices. The blood reddens the mite, hence the name, red mite. The houses at the plant are thoroughly cleaned, and sprayed each spring, summer and fall with a spray composed of one part of carbolic and four parts of coal oil. The roosts are painted twice each month during warm weather, with common crank case oil. The above treatment is very penetrating and plays havoc with the mites.

The cleaning and spraying is done during a sunny forenoon, which allows time for the house to dry thoroughly before evening. Fresh air and sunlight are wonderful disinfectants for the poultry house, and combined with cleanliness are preventives against most of the poultry yard ills. Exhibition circular, No. 85, "How to Rid the Hen House of Mites," may be had free of charge from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

A good spray pump should be part of every poultry keeper's equipment.

"Give me a kiss," he pleaded.
"She made no reply.
"Won't you please give me a kiss?" he asked again.
"Still no answer.
"Please, please kiss me!" he begged.
"Still no reply.
"Is say, are you deaf?" he roared.
"No," she snapped. "Are you paralyzed?"

CURING HAY

Hay, to be of the best quality, must be cut when the crop is at the right stage of maturity, and must then be cured in the best manner, says B. F. Tinney, Dominion Experimental Station, Charlottetown, P. E. I. Over-ripe hay loses a large percentage of leaf, and is of inferior feed value.

In general the principles of hay making are the same for all hay crops. The crop must be cut at a stage of maturity that will give the highest yield of palatable hay. Above all, the crop must not be permitted to ripen too far or the resultant feed will be woody, with a high percentage of wastage when fed.

In the making of clover hay, the best quality is obtained where the crop is cut when in full bloom, or when the heads are just beginning to turn brown. It should be cut in the morning as soon as free from dew. It may be tedded or turned by hand, and then coiled in rather small but carefully made coils, or cocks, in the evening. Hay of this type cures best under conditions which prevent very rapid drying of the leaves. If favorable weather obtains, the hay may be taken in after several days, directly from the coil, although if help is available, very fine hay results if the coils are shaken out several hours previous to hauling.

When a heavy rain has fallen on clover after it has been cut, the operation of curing becomes difficult. If very wet, and left in large coils, it will mildew; if spread out in the hot sun, the leaves blacken and break off readily, leaving a stemmy hay. If the weather is fine following the rain, a fairly satisfactory method is to leave the coils undisturbed during the day. In the evening, if the weather appears settled, spread the coils sparingly and leave open all night. The hay may then be fit for drawing in the following day, or it may be necessary to coil for further curing.

haul and store when the hay rustles nicely. The addition of one or two pounds of common salt per ton of hay as it is being stored usually adds to the keeping quality and palatability. Timothy hays and mixed hays should be cut when the seed is forming, or as most farmers say, "Just after the second blossom falls." Cut in the morning after the dew is off, tedded or turned in the afternoon, and raked and coiled in large well made coils in the evening. It is frequently possible to take in hay of this type on the following day. Under favorable conditions one may dispense with the coiling, hauling directly from the windrow; when this method is feasible, considerable labor is saved.

Under very favorable weather conditions, timothy and mixed hays are sometimes cut in the morning and stored away in the afternoon. There are arguments for and against such a practice. With hay cut at the proper stage of maturity it is doubtful if it would keep properly in storage under such treatment. At a later stage, however, or with hay somewhat over-ripe, it is quite possible to follow such a practice successfully.

Postponed

Not a thousand miles from here a few months ago, a wife lay very ill. Having brought in a clever orphan girl, the sick woman called the young girl to her and said: "I shall soon leave my little children motherless. They know you and love you. After I am gone, I want you and my husband to marry." The young woman bursting into tears, said, "We were just talking about that." The wife recovered.

HOW TO KEEP AN UMBRELLA

The late chief justice of British Columbia, Sir Matthew Baillie Begbie, combined with more notable qualities uncommon shrewdness and humor in the small affairs of life. At a time when many complaints were heard of the theft of umbrellas from public places, a friend asked him how he managed to keep possession of his—a handsome umbrella with a chased silver handle.

The judge evaded the question, but a week later they met again in his cloak room of a court. The judge called his friend's attention to the umbrella rack, which contained half a dozen umbrellas of all sorts and conditions, and asked which one of them he considered was least likely to be taken by mistake. The friend pointed to one that, although of fair quality, had no handle. "That's mine," said the judge, and taking a beautiful silver handle from his pocket and screwing it on the cripple, added, "Now you know how I keep my umbrella."

Notify the Police!
"Mother," said little Bobby, bursting into the house all out of breath, "there's going to be the deuce to pay down at the grocer's. His wife has got a baby girl, and he's had a 'Boy Wanted' sign in the window for a week."

THREE TESTS

If you are tempted to reveal a tale someone to you has told about another, make it pass. Before you speak, three gates of gold.

Three narrow gates: First, "Is it true?" Then, "Is it needful?" In your mind Give truthful answer. And the next Is last and narrowest—"Is it kind?" And if to reach your lips at last It passed through these gateways three, Then you may tell the tale, nor fear What the result of speech may be.
