RURAL HYDRO EXTENTIONS COST SUM EQUAL TO DEFICIT FOR 1926

Financial Statement Indicates That Benefits to Farmers Prevent a Balanced Budget.

Two chief causes account for the improved financial conditions of Ontario, as shown in the announcement of Hon. J. D. Monteith this week in which the deficit for 1926 is given as something a little more than $300,000.

The chief item involved is revenue increases from various sources, for an analysis of the expenditure indicates that the reduction in cost of running the province is very slight, amounting to less than $100,000.

Chief revenue increases took place in the Treasury Department where the revenue jumped from 17 1/2 millions to almost 20 millions. This increase is accounted for almost entirely by increases in collections under the Succession Duties Act, several extraordinarily large estates having come under the collector's scrutiny during the fiscal year.

Increased revenues from other departments has been owing to improved collection methods, and the running audits established by Col. Price a couple of years ago. In the Highways, of course, the gas tax accounts for the increase, which is around two million dollars.

Benefit to Farmers Roughly, the increased expenditure in the department of the Prime Minister, for further extension of rural power lines, to the cost of which the province pays fifty per cent, is just something less than a third of a million dollars. In other words, if the present Government had not extended its policy of making cheap power available to farmers for barn and household operations, the deficit for 1926 would have entirely disappeared.

Mining Activities An interesting and illuminating feature of the financial report is that concerning increased revenues in the Department of Mines, under Hon. Chas. McCrea. The revenue here is as much over half a million dollars as it was below that figure last year, making a total increase for the year of $225,262.60. The total revenue now stands slightly less than $800,000, which is derived almost exclusively from miners and prospectors' fees and profits taxes on producing mines.

Game and fish revenue is not included, although under the same Ministry. In this branch there is a smaller revenue. Increased mining revenue from the old sources indicates the revival of interest in Ontario's mineral resources, and although figures so far supplied do not so state, it is safe to say that the increase is made up in its entirety from the acceleration of prospecting activity. During the year several new mining recorders' offices have been established, notably in the Red Lake district.

Leakages Stopped Increase of over $200,000 in the Provincial Secretary's Department indicates that closer check on provincial jails, hospitals and institutions has stopped up several very serious leaks which for years prior to the present government's tenure have run wild. This department has not only increased its revenue by about $200,000, but has also cut down its expenditures by a similar amount, making a net improvement over the previous year of almost half a million dollars.

In the department of capital account, the entire reduction in expenditure, under two millions, took place in the Department of Works and Highways. Control "Uncontrollable". The present Government has shown that by careful management, especially in the borrowing departments of the treasury, so-called "uncontrollable" expenditures are really controllable. In this branch the chief "uncontrollable" outlay has been the annual interest bill on borrowed capital, amounting last year to $17,238,175. This year it was $10,802 less, indicating a more conservative borrowing programme than under the previous regime, whose interest bills are still embarrassing the Government. General departmental economies have further reduced the "uncontrollable".

Cost of New Building Expenditure upon the new administration building, known as the "East Block," is not shown in detail in the report. In each of the years 1925 and 1926 the expenditures under public works are about a million greater than in 1924, indicating that this undertaking has occasioned the increased outlay. Outlay last year in this branch, as capital was some $70,000 greater than the year before. Final reckoning on this account will take place during the current year and it is anticipated that it will occasion a considerable increase under this head.

Woods Revenue Increasing Increase in mining revenues is more than offset by decrease in timber revenues, amounting to $200,000 in round figures. These figures do not necessarily denote a slump in productivity, but rather a lessening only of those activities which affect the department in some branches of the industry in practically all departments, is anticipated with a relatively more prosperous outlook for provincial revenues coming under this head.

MOUNT FOREST GIRL RISING OPERA STAR

Miss Avis Phillips Making Name for Herself in England
Miss Avis Phillips, a Mount Forest girl is winning distinction in musical circles in England. She recently took part in a month's engagement with the London Operatic Company at Bristol and sang and acted magnificently in her leading role in Mozart's opera, "Cosi Fan Tutti".
As a result of her success in Bristol, where, besides singing the lead at the above mentioned performance, she had a small part in two other operas and sang in all the choirs, she was engaged to sing the lead in "Alceste," with the Oxford Operatic Company in Oxford for three nights during the second week in December. As there is only one feminine role in the opera, and it is a very difficult one, she is alternating with another Canadian singer, Odette DeForas. Miss Phillips also sang at the Lyceum Club when Mary McLeod Moore gave a talk on her Canadian trip.
Edward Johnson has brought much glory to Wellington South and it is now probable that this gifted Mount Forest girl will do the same for Wellington North.

The direct and effective cause is in all cases surface of the body.
Note: Dr. Forster's columns as will be of public print. Personal, accompanied by self-address Dr. Arthur L. Forster.

How Chilling Causes Cold
There is a close relationship between the circulation of blood, skin which covers the body's mucous membranes, which structures inside the body, when the vessels in the contracted as a result of those in the mucous membrane dilated and contain more. Hence, if the vessels of the contracted as a result of a draft of cold air, those mucous membranes are a functionally dilated. In other words, the blood squeezed out of the has to find room in another.

For example, if the feet, wet and chilled a considerable amount of blood is affected because feet have a very large surface compared to their bulk. The that normally traverses the vessels of the feet now engorge vessels of the mucous membrane. There is congestion of these branches and from this, only a step to inflammation, the membranes are unable to circulate is now slowed, the over-present germ and held.

The reason it is that air passages which suffer most from this circulation (two-fold):
First, they hinder circulation.
The condition might develop in any part of the which is especially susceptible. Thus congestion of the might in one individual be gastritis, in another be trouble, and a third to trouble.
Under normal circumstances little glands in the mucous branches secrete a fluid in just amount to keep the moist. This activity on is in direct relation to the supply. If the blood in a creases these glands become active and an excessive secretion manufactured. Which why the nose "runs" when "cold in the head."
