THE UNKNOWN

By E. O. Laughlin

DO not understand . . . ■ They bring so many, many flowers to me— Rainbows of roses, wreaths from every land; And hosts of solemn strangers come to see My tomb here on these quiet, wooded heights. My tomb here seems to be One of the sights.

The low-voiced men, who speak Of me quite fondly, call me The Unknown: But now and then at dusk, Madonna meek, Bent, mournful mothers come to me alone And whisper down-the flowers and grasses through Such names as "Jim" and "John" . . .

And once my sweetheart came. She did not-nay, of course she could not-know, But thought of me, and crooned to me the name She called me by-how many years ago? A very precious name. Her eyes were wet,

Yet glowing, flaming so . . . She won't forget! Nine years ago the guns ceased firing. Nine years ago weary men turned homeward from four years of gallant enduring. Nine years ago the world went almost crazy with the reaction from war tension. Nine years ago families welcomed home their longlost menfolk, and their women, too, for many women served. Nine years ago in countless homes the bereaved who had been enduring like soldiers gave way at last to the relief of tears.

Of all the tragedies of those tragic years, none touched the hearts of men more closely than that of the missing men, the unknown soldiers. Each nation has its monument to the unsung heroes. If the monument is the outward sign of a shrine of remembrance in every heart, then there is hope that the Will to Peace is a living, growing force in the world today.
