GRAIN MIXTURES FOR ENSILAGE

(Experimental Farms Note.)

In districts where, owing to cool, moist weather during the summer months, corn is uncertain, mixtures of grains such as oats, peas and vetch will usually give better results as an ensilage crop. In general such mixtures will grow at lower temperatures than corn, and on land where surface water is readily disposed of, are not harmed by frequent precipitation and continued dull weather. Although comparatively low yielding on a green weight basis, grain mixtures are relatively high in dry matter, and at the Dominion Experimental Station at Lennoxville, have during the past five years, produced more dry matter, or material of actual feeding value per acre than corn and slightly less than sunflowers. Being sown in the same manner as an ordinary grain crop, they have proven excellent nurse-crops for seeding to grasses and clover, and of course, do not require hoeing or cultivating during the growing period. Accordingly, such mixtures can be grown with less labor than other ensilage crops, but owing to the high cost of seed, particularly peas and vetch, the cost of production per ton of dry matter, as determined at Lennoxville, is on the whole high, having proved to be more than sunflowers, but less than corn.

Another desirable feature of grain mixtures is that although they are an excellent ensilage crop, they need not be used as such if space in the silo is not available. If cut while green and cured, they make excellent hay, and if standing well, the crop may be allowed to ripen and will give a fair yield of grain of high feeding value.

The most commonly used grain mixture for ensilage purposes is a combination of varying proportions of oats, peas and vetches, generally known as "O. P. V." As a rule the varieties used are Banner oat, Prussian Blue or Golden Vine pea and spring vetch, commonly known as Black Tares. From the results obtained, during the past three years, at the Dominion Experimental Station at Lennoxville, Que., it is apparent that such a mixture is not the most satisfactory that may be used. From the information at present available it would seem that the value of a mixture is governed by its ability to remain standing for, if the crop lodges badly while quite green, pea and vetch vines rot quickly. If much of the forage is in this condition it will make an ensilage of inferior quality with a very disagreeable odor. Accordingly, although a mixture may make the best ensilage while in the dough stage, if it lodges while quite green it should be cut and ensiled without delay. Of a large number of mixtures that have been tested, all those containing Banner oat, peas and vetch, in varying conditions, have invariably lodged before the oat reached the dough stage. On the other hand, mixtures containing Gold Rain oat, and Golden Vine or Chancellor pea and vetch have proven satisfactory in this respect, and would apparently have come to full maturity without lodging. Also the substitution of fifteen pounds of spring rye has given excellent results.

It has been observed that although vetch is commonly used in such mixtures it actually forms a very small percentage of the total crop. Of eleven mixtures containing vetch that were tested in 1927, the percentage of this species in the seeding ranged from 11.1 to 17.6, but the analysis of the forage showed that it formed a much smaller percentage of the crop, the range being from 1.04 to 7.83 per cent. In view of the high price of vetch seed it is doubtful if its use is advisable in this district. Better results have amount of peas, but if this is carried beyond a bushel of peas to two bushels of oats, the mixture will lodge very easily.

Experimental work with grain mixtures is being continued at the Lennoxville Station and additional information will, no doubt, be available each year for several years to come. For the present, however, it would seem that the best results are to be obtained with a mixture composed of two bushels of a stiff strawed tall oat, such as Gold Rain and one bushel of a strong growing pea such as Chancellor or Golden Vine. This mixture should be seeded at the rate of from three to three and a half bushels per acre according to the fertility of the soil. On low-lying situations, where a crop would lodge easily, it is advisable to substitute fifteen pounds of the oats by a like quantity of spring rye.

NEW MAIL BOXES READY

A shipment of 1,000 new rural mail boxes has been received by Postal Superintendent W. J. May of London. They will be held for distribution to new customers in Western Ontario. The boxes are of the latest design and are slightly different in construction to those now in use. The old-fashioned box was fastened to a post by a steel arm, but the present box is affixed to the top of the post and swings on a pivot in the centre of the bottom of the box. The new boxes are also slightly smaller in size, but a larger door, opening from the top, has been built, which will allow larger parcels to be placed in the box.

Complete Success

Young Housewife: "Are you sure this cleaner that you are selling me will really take out the dirt?"

Agent: "Will it? Say, lady, yesterday I rubbed some of it on a copy of 'Scandalous Stories' and when I got through I had the Sunday School Gazette."

An American said to an Irishman: "In America we have a hen that laid an egg six inches long."

"In Ireland, we can beat that," replied the Irishman.

"How?"

"With an egg beater," calmly answered the Irishman.
