Money in Farming

We are glad to learn from Hon. John S. Martin, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, that there is as much money to be made in farming today as ever there was. Unfortunately the middle-man takes too great a share and leaves the producer too little. If farmers could get even three-fourths of what the consumer pays, they would be well satisfied. The people of Ontario are willing to pay a fair price for their food, and Mr. Martin believes that the time is coming when the producer will receive a fair reward for his labor. We hope that that time will soon arrive, for agriculture is a basic industry.

Instead of presenting much new legislation this session, Mr. Martin is concentrating on the administration and improvements of the Acts already on the statute book. The Department is very properly endeavoring to enforce the Act for the destruction of noxious weeds. Only about 25 per cent. of the 891 municipalities in the Province failed last year to appoint inspectors for this purpose, and it is hoped appoint weed inspectors this year. Government is going to do some-criminal figure and present him the Quebec Government in its readded, had nothing to do with the Turning to his wife he said, also be directed to vacant lots and permit? Along with out that evening, and get official partment is laying emphasis on the thus be immune from being importance of good seed. Tobacco has recently sprung into prominence in southwest Ontario. These counties can undoubtedly grow much larger quantities, but the problem of marketing must be first solved. Sheep raising will be encouraged by the formation sheep clubs among young farmers, and steps have been taken to bring all the creamery butter of the Province up to the highest stand-

As Mr. Martin says, agriculture not only has to do with rural homes, but indirectly affects all homes in the Province. At present it is not an easy job to make a living on the farm, but the Government is making an earnest endeavor to remove some of the difficulties in the way of the farmer.-Toronto Mail and Empire.

Simple Dignity in Funerals

In these days when we have formed the habit of signalling the decease of relatives by a gaudy funeral scene, whether we can afford it or not, there is a sharp lesson for us in the way in which Earl Haig's remains were taken from the railway train to Dryburgh Abbey. The casket was conveyed in a simple Scottish farm cart through the ranks of the British Legion to the grave. Is it not in simplicity that there is the most telling dignity? A farm cart carried the remains of the greatest British general of his day to their last resting place near the ancient home of the Haigs.—Almonte Gazette.

In building up a public library, the utmost consideration of the books purchased is also essential and no book, that will not stand at least a second reading should enter into a collection. We hear a great deal about desirability of having a hopby, a worthwhile hobby, and we can think of none more commendable than the good book collecting hobby.—Arthur Enterprise.
