Notice

Take notice that the foregoing is a true synopsis of a proposed By-Law of the corporation of the Town of Durham to be submitted to the votes of the electors on the Thirtieth day of July, A. D. 1928, between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon at the following places:

And that if the assent of the electors is obtained to the said proposed By-law it will be taken into consideration by the Municipal Council of the said Corporation at a meeting thereof to be held after the expiration of one month from the date of the first publication of this notice, and that such first publication was made on the Fifth day of July, A. D. 1928.
W. B. VOLLET, Clerk.

Take notice further that a tenant who desires to vote upon said proposed By-law must deliver to the Clerk not later than the tenth day before the day appointed for taking the vote a declaration under the Canada Evidence Act, that he is a tenant whose lease extends for the time for which the debt or liability is to be created, or in which the money to be raised by the proposed By-law is payable, or for at least twenty-one years, and that he has by the lease covenanted to pay all municipal taxes in respect of the property of which he is tenant other than local improvement rates.

WHEN EIGHT MEN COWED LINERS CREW

One of the strangest tales of the sea we have ever read was that provided by the eight stowaways aboard the Jervis Bay, an Australian Commonwealth liner, which was reported in the newspapers a short time ago. We do not remember seeing the complete story, and infer that when the news editors got the end of it they were rather ashamed of the hullabaloo that the first reports created. It was something of an anti-climax, and yet it is the anti-climax that interests us. How could eight unarmed men terrify a vessel of nearly 14,000 tons, carrying 600 passengers and a crew of 120, many of them ex-service men? They wrought such havoc that the captain sent out calls of such desperation as might have been expected had the ship been on fire or wrecked on an iceberg. Our only explanation is that the nerves of the captain are not what they should be. This is only one of two or three incidents in the past few months which suggest that with the British seaman abandoning the grog in favor of lemonade and nut sundaes, something of the old spirit of the service has departed.

"Save Our Ship"

All the world was thrilled by the first calls sent out by the captain, who said he was having trouble with a warship in his vicinity. He was then out of Freemantle, West Australia, and heading across the Indian Ocean for Colombo. He was informed that there was not a warship handy. There followed a period of silence and it was feared that the stowaways had got control of the vessel. Some people put forth the suggestion that the stowaways were really Communists and were about to start up a world revolution. Later on an auxiliary armed vessel carrying a guard of fleet marines picked up the Jervis Bay and the marines went aboard. Ten of them were all that were required, and there was no further trouble. When the marines went aboard the stowaways were below decks, but appeared when summoned, and beheld the marines on deck. "Here come the Boy Scouts" yelled one of them not without a sense of humor. But there was no fight in them and they were taken ashore at Colombo. Their lawyer tried to have the case taken to London on the ground that they were British subjects and the offense had taken place on British territory, but the magistrate preferred to try them immediately, with the result that they were given five months and two weeks' imprisonment, a sentence as curious as the rest of the affair.

Refused to Work

The stowaways would have scored a victory all down the line had they received this sentence after arriving in England for their main idea was to reach England without either paying their fare or working their passage. The leader of the gang was Arthur Jackson, a Cuban half caste. The others numbered seven, thus verifying the agitated captain's original count. They were discovered a few days after the vessel had left Freemantle, summoned before Captain Daniel and reprimanded. Then they were given cabins like the rest of the passengers, supplied with food and ordered to work. They refused to clean the deck, saying that the food was not enough and the decks too long and broad. Thereupon the captain ordered them evicted from their cabins and sent to the ship's hospital where their freedom would be limited. That very evening while a concert was in progress, the captain was informed that the stowaways were loose, mingling with the passengers, and causing great annoyance by cutting in on the dancers. One of them was reported to have seized a small officer whom he whirled about in a highly insubordinate manner.

A Daniel in Judgment

After a struggle they were captured and again sent to the isolation ward. This time they were handcuffed as punishment for using bad language in the presence of ladies. Early next morning the captain was informed that the stowaways had broken their handcuffs and were again roaming the ship. Two were found asleep with the handcuffs intact. Then Captain Daniel, who seems to have been aptly named, ordered that all the handcuffs should be removed, since it would not be fair to have some of the hoodlums handcuffed while others were none. Even this concession to reasonableness and logic did not soften their hearts and shortly after they had been again confined, and a hatch put across the head of the stairs to keep them from getting out, they got hold of a battering ram and were trying to get out again and mingle in a boisterous and disrespectful manner with the passengers, some of whom were of rather exclusive disposition. This was bad enough, but the captain knew that over the roof of the hospital through which they were trying to break were the electric wires which were vital to the steering of the ship.

Quelled by Hose

Had these been injured either by crowbar or fire, the ship would have been absolutely helpless. So more hatches were set up, and the hose was turned on the stowaways. Even the electric light by which they had been enabled to proceed with their crowbar work was cut off and they were left in the stow-darkness. Nevertheless, the stowaways found some matches and soon smoke was seen emerging from their little encampment. There was much speculation as to what this might portend. The stowaways did not leave the captain long in suspense. They announced that their sincere purpose was to set fire to the ship. The hose was again turned on them and there was no more trouble. That, and the sentences of five months and two weeks are supposed to constitute an end to the story, but our private doubt is that Captain Daniel will live long enough to supply an adequate answer to the question "Why didn't you throw them overboard?"

BANK MERGER WILL MAKE BANK STRONGER

about $700,000,000 was announced last night.

The Standard Bank is strong in Ontario and less well organized in Western Canada. The Bank of Commerce, for its part, can supply a Western Canada connection which is said, in a joint statement will redound to the advantage of Standard Bank customers, and at the same time benefit itself from the position of the Standard Bank in Ontario, where three-quarters of its 220 branches are located.

Assets $700,000,000

The Standard Bank's assets, which exceed $100,000,000, will be added to those of the Bank of Commerce, which approximate $600,000,000. When the amalgamation, which must be authorized by the federal cabinet, is completed, the capital stock of the Bank of Commerce will be $248,823,400 and the reserve fund an equal figure.

The purchase by the Canadian Bank of Commerce of the assets and undertaking of the Standard Bank will confirm the Bank of Commerce as the third largest institution in Canada, ranking closely behind the Royal Bank of Canada, which has a capital of $29,941,950 and a reserve fund of equal amount, and the Bank of Montreal, which has a capital of $28,916,700 and a reserve fund of $30,916,700.

Canada will have 12 chartered banks when the merger is completed, including the Ontario and Manitoba provincial savings banks and 13, including the Eastern Bank of Canada whose incorporation occurred at the last session of parliament. There have been 36 bank mergers since confederation 61 years ago, eight being made since the armistice.

Number of Mergers

Absorptions and mergers of Canadian banks within recent years have reduced the number of banks in Canada to one dozen, excluding the Eastern Bank of Canada, which was incorporated since the last session of Parliament. Since confederation there have been no fewer than 36 mergers, eight of them since the close of the war. In 1919 the Bank of Nova Scotia absorbed the Bank of Ottawa; in 1922 the Bank of Montreal took the Merchants Bank; in 1923 the Canadian Bank of Commerce amalgamated with the Bank of Hamilton; in 1924 the Bank of Hochelaga and the Banque Nationale came together under the name of the Banque Canadienne Nationale, and which has now been absorbed, amalgamated with the Sterling Bank, while the Bank of Montreal merged with Moisons. The Union Bank was brought into the Royal in 1925.

ROILER CHICKENS FOR THE BEST TRADE

Broiler chickens, when properly finished are eagerly purchased by householders and restaurant operators who regard them as a high class delicacy. Unfortunately, during the months of highest production the price these birds bring runs low because so many of them are marketed in a thin unfinished condition. On this subject, Market Weekly Egg and Poultry, Dominion Review, issued by the Dominion Live Stock Branch at Ottawa, has the following to say under date of May 29th: "Complaints are still being received concerning the poor, unfinished quality of broilers reaching the market. Birds of this type, in addition to bringing a poor price themselves, have an adverse effect on the price of the better grades." It is true that the marketing of the entire broiler crop within a space of about two months has a depressing influence on the market but these birds could be moved into consumptive channels much more has been accepted by the trustees, readily were they properly finished and suitable for a high class trade. Investigations into broiler market conditions which are at present being conducted by the Dominion Live Stock Branch, indicate that a number of retail dealers not handling broilers would be quite willing to do so could they secure the quality of birds essential for their trade. The retail market is essentially high class and it is very difficult to find an immediate outlet for the thin, unfinished birds.
