LAUGHS ON THE WIRE

As originally sent off, a telegraphic message simply announced the fact that the "Governor had turned the first sod" of a railway line between two towns in Queensland, says an Old Country paper. When it reached London, however, it read: "Governor twins first son." The surprise of his friends, who knew he was a bachelor, may be imagined when they read in the newspapers that "the wife of his Excellency the Governor has presented him with twins, of whom the first is a son."

On the occasion of a shipwreck on the Portuguese coast, the story was telegraphed to London in French, and, in connection with the exciting episodes connected with the saving of the passengers and crew, the correspondent added: "Une quantite de bieres ont ete envoyee sur lieu."

The London sub-editor, possibly suffering from acute thirst at the time, made it read: "Large quantities of beer have been sent to the scene of the wreck."

Sub-editors frequently use the word "kill" for "suppress" or "delete", but its use caused a good deal of trouble to a representative attending a League of Nations conference. He had sent a "too previous" item to his paper about a visit of Mr. Lloyd George, and cabled "Kill Lloyd George."

Within a couple of hours he was amazed to receive a visit from the police. His rooms were turned upside down and an inventory taken of all his papers. He was at a loss to know what it meant. Fortunately his colleagues came to his rescue. They were able to assure the Swiss authorities that he was not dangerous, and when explanations were forthcoming, on production of the offending telegram, everybody had a good laugh.

A merchant away from home learning of the illness of his wife, telegraphed to his doctor for particulars. The reply came: "Your wife has had a child. If we can keep her from having another tonight she will be all right." Of course the letter "d" in child had been substituted for a second "t".

When the well-known theatrical manager, C. B. Cochran, was recuperating from a severe illness in Spain he remembered that Sarah Bernhardt was opening her London season, and that it behoved him to send her a congratulatory wire. His concluding sentence was in French, of course, and meant to say, "I throw my homage at your feet." But the telegraphist made it, "I throw my fromage (cheese) at your feet," and, as Cochran remarked later, "It's to be hoped it wasn't Camembert."

A happy lover was suddenly cast into despair by the message: "Come as soon as you can; I am dying.—Kate." Kate herself met him at the station. She explained she had really written that she was "dying to see him" but, as it made fifteen words instead of twelve, she had cut out three!
