CROP ROTATION AND ROOT-ROT OF WHEAT

(Experimental Farms Note)
It is a well known fact that better crop yields are obtained by a proper change of crops. The moisture, tilth and fertility are improved, and stronger plants are produced. At least a part of the improved fertility is associated with the increased activity of the soil inhabiting fungi and bacteria, resulting from the change of crop or cultural practice.

In most soils there are literally millions of these microscopic plants. Sometimes several millions may be found in a single gram of soil. The numbers and kind of these tiny plants depend directly on the amount and kind of food, and conditions for their growth in the soil. Certain plants favor the development of some kinds more than others. When root parts or other plant remains are added to the soil, the fungi and bacteria quickly multiply on this material reducing it to plant food. At the same time the activity of these affects other potential plant food in the soil, and which, without this influence would remain unavailable. Unfortunately, some of these soil inhabiting fungi and bacteria may attack both living and dead root parts of some plants. The fungi that cause root-rot of wheat is able to do this. Therefore, when wheat follows wheat for a term of years, there is an accumulation of the root-rotting fungi. On the other hand, oats, flax and the legumes are not appreciably attacked by the fungi which attack the roots of wheat. With a crop of any of these the root-rotting fungi will decrease so that wheat may again be grown with comparatively slight loss.

From extensive surveys, made by the Dominion Plant Pathology Laboratories, it is clear that rarely more than a trace of root-rot occurs where wheat follows breaking of the virgin sod. However, there is a marked increase of the severity of root-rot on the second, third and fourth crops. The reason for this has not yet been determined experimentally, but there is the possibility that the introduction of wheat debris into the soil is an important factor. Of course, there are many cases where severe root-rot fails to develop, and this may be due to certain soil or other climatic factors.

Where spring wheat follows wheat successively on old cultivated land the root-rots tend to become more severe. The affect of the time of plowing on the development of root-rots has not been determined. There is good evidence that stubbling in a crop or the inclusion of a large amount of wheat stubble will greatly favor the severity. But summer-fallow, or a crop of oats, will undoubtedly, reduce the root-rots on the following crop of wheat. But to obtain the desired results, the oats and the summerfallow must be free from wheat or other volunteer host grasses. Some of the worst cases of root-rot have occurred where wheat followed broom sod.

Would You be a Magnate On $216 a Year?

The Bell Telephone Company is owned by 15,300 shareholders and 95 per cent of them live in Canada. Over 50 per cent of them are women.

The average shareholder has 27 shares and gets $216 a year on his money. The largest has 1,510 shares, which is less than one-quarter of one per cent of the total.

The company has grown from a few telephones to over 700,000, but it has never split its stock and never departed from its policy of the best service at lowest cost.

The monthly rates paid by telephone users in Ontario and Quebec today are the lowest rates in the world for comparable service.
