It is six years since the writer and family, on the 5th of April, became residents of Edge Hill, and can safely say their lot has been cast in pleasant places by being the recipients of good and obliging neighbors. On the opposite side on the old Moffat farm, on the same date six years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson and family became residents of Edge Hill, also Mr. Robinson was a prosperous farmer near Hampden in Normanby, and still continues to be so at his new home. A local preacher in the old schoolhouse near our old home on a cold Sunday morning while warming himself told a story of a good old Christian lady who was a great smoker. She dreamed she died and was carried up to the door of the heavenly home. The book keeper told her to wait to see if he had her name on his books. After looking he told her he could not find her name. "But I am sure it is there", she said. He looked again with the same result. She urged on him to look a third time and in coming back he said, "Excuse me, lady, I found your name well down on the page of the book and it was so blackened with tobacco smoke that it was hardly readable". So, if true, many names will be blackened on the book of life with tobacco smoke.

A poor Scot was supposedto be on his death bed. The minister, coming to see him and beginning to tell him of the good awaiting those who wanted to be in a better home above, told Donald all the good things awaiting the guests at that beautiful table. Donald said, raising on his bed, "Will they have the bottle there?" no," said the preacher. "Tut, tut," said Donald, "I always liked to see a bottle at each end of a feast table".

Mrs. J. H. Sherk of Detroit, who has been visiting in town with Mrs. H. R. Koch, is spending this week with her son, Mr. Perlous Sherk and family, in Bentinck. She returns to Detroit next week.

Those who stayed at home last Sunday missed good messages in the different churches everywhere. The Rev. Mr. Corry of the Presbyterian body, Priceville, will have communion next Sunday. The communion last Sunday week.
