Post Office, Depots Burglarized Tuesday

Thieves Received But Little Reward For Their Work, However .- Evidence Points That Jobs Were the Work of Amateurs.

Sometime during the early hours of Tuesday morning Durham was visited by burglars, who forced entrance into the Post Office, and both C.N.R. and C. P. R. stations. The reward for the night's adventure was small and would hardly pay for the trouble necessary to pull off the job. At the post office between five and ten dollars was collected, the personal money of Postmaster while about five dollars in was the sum total obtained at the C. N. R. At the C. P. R. there were no results, nothing in the nature of money being missed. In all three instances the thieves gained entrance by the use of a jimmy, breaking open the doors or windows of the places visited. Less than fifteen dollars in negotiable currency was the total reward for the night.

The general opinion is that the work was that of amateurs, and poor ones at that. Even in the forcing of the windows, and the two doors of the post office, it was done in a purely amateurish manner. There are some who even go hydro MAY PURCHASE so far as to say that it looked like a local job, for those responsible apparently knew the run of the buildings and the hour at which to strike.

On Tuesday there were detectives Failure of Minneapolis Concern May from both railroads and the post office department in town, but whatever they found was not disclosed, though we are informed they picked up several clues which may lead to some further action later.
