Come in & Chat Awhile
—Ruth Raeburn.

Dear Lucy:
I have been reading Murdoch MacKinnon's book, "The Imprisoned Splendor" and decided I would pass along to you some of the choice thoughts I found in the chapter entitled, "The Measure of Man". These thoughts are based on the text, "If there be any virtue". First we will give some of the Author's definitions of virtue.
"Virtue is a priceless thing and is most attractive in its unconscious form."
"Virtue can hardly be said to exist where there are no temptations, virtue and innocence being quite distinct. The child is innocent, the man of experience and moral fibre is virtuous."
Virtue never deceives any man. It does not promise material gain, but it speaks of a treasure in that realm where moth and rust do not consume and where thieves do not break through and steal; it does not promise many days, but it articulates life into a Divine scheme that gives it infinite and eternal worth.
There is a rightness at the heart of things whereby every moral victory is registered and indelibly impressed upon our inward life.
Virtue is knowledge, to know the good is to do the good.
Virtue is the happy mean between two extremes. Not to work too much or too little, not to eat too much or too little, that is virtue.
If there is anything that is good, or amiable or praiseworthy in the religion and philosophy of a pagan, take it into your minds and hearts and see how the gospel of Jesus Christ will transform and ennoble it.
Our progress in relation to individuals, institutions, and religion will be in proportion as we show a largeness of sympathy and fullness of confidence that will welcome light and virtue from every source and at the same time remain true to the knowledge of Him that called us to glory and virtue.
The measure of a man is his virtue, what he is after all the trappings have been removed, after the appearances have become transparent and man stands out in bold and naked reality.
We forget that the measure for a man is the measure of an angel, what he is in a word of idealism and spirituality. The breadth of a man's sympathies, the character and quality of his thought, the depth of his insight, the keenness of his judgment, the purity of his motives, the justice of his cause, the reverence of his attitude, the amiableness of his temperament, the strength of his will, and the courage and heroic endurance he can bring to bear upon the tasks of life, these taken altogether with faith in the Unseen, and conviction regarding the final triumph of righteousness, constitute the standard of a man.
A man is not what he is getting, but what he is becoming; not what he is working at, but what he is living for; not what he has, but what he is. This is a truism, and if there is any stronger way of putting it, let us say that a man is what he is worth to God. An angel is traditionally a ministering spirit sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation. That is exactly what a man is. Man is the real angel, the messenger of God, to his fellows, and his measure will be according to the faithfulness and ability with which he renders this spiritual ministry.
The measure of a man is the courage with which he has faced temptation and the success with which he has overcome sin, the good for which he has stood, and his helpfulness and service to others. If there be any virtue other than this, and if there be any other quality worthy of praise, they too shall enter into the reckoning in determining the measure of a man.

Virtue is man's highest moral attainment, the Alps and the Andes of the moral world. To succeed here is not to have failed anywhere.
A virtuous man is God's highest creative achievement. An honest man is the noblest work of God.
The Hebrew word for virtue is chayil meaning force, strength. The true man is the man of virtue, who will never yield his principles for the sake of temporary advantage. There is no sin except in the surrender of the will, and no virtue except in the resistance of the soul. Here then is the answer to the appeals of the wronged, better men, stronger men, truer and nobler men.
Vir, a man, virtue, the essence of the highest manhood, the vital energy in the heart.
God never left Himself without a witness. He raises men to meet the emergency, and when things are at their worst, time gives birth to a new man, and a new voice is heard.
"Mourn not for vanished ages, With their great heroic men, Who dwell in history's pages, And live in the poet's pen. For the grandest times are before us, And the world is yet to see. The noblest worth of this old earth, Is the men that are to be."

Fashion Fancies

The Sleeveless One-Piece Frock

The throngs of shoppers inspired by the sunny weather these days see prints featured before all else. And prints that are more irresistible than ever! Black and white is as always high in the mode with navy and white running it a good close second.
Most of the new frocks are short-sleeved and sleeveless and the woman who cherishes her comfort above all else will delight in this.
Today's sketch shows a sleeveless frock of navy flat crepe polkadotted in white. Originality is achieved in the geometric cut of the neckline, the insert on the bodice and the pleated section of the skirt revealing the same treatment.
A stitched belt of navy blue is placed at the normal waistline.

Miss Macphail's Letter

Ottawa, May 9, 1930

We are to have an election whether we want it or not. Roars of applause, and indistinguishable din of utterance greeted the Prime Minister's announcement. Excitement ran high. Here and there a member jumped to his feet, waving a blue book, or the white "orders of the day". A frenzy swept the House, and presented to the packed galleries a spectacle unparalleled since 1926. So prolonged was the cheering, so deaf the House to the Speaker's call for "order", that it looked for a time as if it would be necessary to adjourn the House forthwith. The only section of the House that preserved its calm was the southeast corner, where sit the Independent groups. Yet with all the apparent approval of the announcement the great majority of members did not want an election this year, and I believe the same could be said of the major part of the electors. Under our system the Prime Minister can announce an election when he will.

The Prime Minister's announcement has been timed to take full advantage of the packed galleries, drawn thither to hear Mr. B. R. Bennett, the Leader of the Opposition. Mr. Bennett's reply to the Budget was awaited with intense interest by the members of the Commons, and the many visitors could be taken as an indication of the general public's interest. His speech was long, but a good-fighting partisan speech withal. He took the expected ground of approval in regard to the upward changes in the tariff. He challenged not the Budget, but right of the Liberal Party to bring down a protectionist Budget. He pointed out that it was the negation of the declared fiscal policy of the Liberal party, and challenged the Government to resign and turn over the power to the real protectionist party. In regard to British preference, Mr. Bennett left the impression that he would not agree to an increase in the British preference unless Britain granted equal privileges to Canada. He spoke for nearly three hours, at times tediously, at other times arousing his followers to frenzied excitement. He twitted Mr. Dunning for having cast his followers to the wolves, and to the amusement of the farm group, he made an effective attack on T. A. Crerar: "He left the Government (Union) for conscience sake; he came back because of lack of conscience. He left the government because of a duty on steel and iron of three dollars, but now he swallows one of six dollars. Mr. Bennett made one statement which had a very dramatic effect. Mr. King had enquired "What about the British Empire?" And Mr. Bennett replied: "I am for the British Empire—next to Canada." It seems we have lived to see a shifting of loyalties. Once the Conservative Party was pretty much "Empire", the Liberal more national. At the moment it appears the other way about.

Mr. Irvine was the first speaker from the farmer's group. He emphasized that at last it was clear to everyone that there was no fundamental difference between the major parties on tariff. He reminded the House that Mr. Dunning and Mr. King in speaking in the West last year, pleaded for the unity of the low tariff forces. "Come with me," says Mr. King. "Into the ranks of the low tariff party". Yet in this budget we have illustrations of protection gone mad. Possibly his best sentence was, "The Liberal Party has come out squarely for protection. It is the part of the irony of fate that it should have fallen to the lot of the first Western Minister of Finance to drop the cut flowers of British Preference on the mangled corpse of free trade." The list of articles coming in free from Great Britain included cut flowers.

To the last Tuesday, May 6th, sustained its eventful course. Mr. Woodsworth's bill to remove the granting of divorce from Parliament to the courts came up for third reading at eight o'clock. It was the most contentious piece of legislation of the session due to a mistaken belief in the country that the grounds for divorce were being made easier and there was a hangover of excitement from the afternoon. Feeling ran high. Amendment after amendment was moved. No member made a speech, and it is doubtful if a hearing would have been given, so impatient was the House. First came a motion amending the Bill, that it should not become operative until the legislative assembly of Ontario requested it. This was defeated on a recorded division. Next a motion to give the bill the three months' hold. Again a vote was asked for. A vote takes time. The hour for private bills closes at nine o'clock. Then came a motion "that the question be now put. Again a division. The minute hand of the clock crept on. Nine o'clock. What would happen? Anxiety was expressed in conversation. Would the Speaker call it nine o'clock, and so refuse the final vote, or would he agree that the vote must be now put. Opinions differed. Some thought he must call it nine o'clock, others, no he must put the question. Scores hunted out their book of rules. The supporters of the bill have hurried consultation. If it is called nine o'clock, what will they do? They decide to challenge the Speaker's ruling. The hubbub is silenced to hear the clerk's announcement as to whether the House had voted to say that the question be now put. It had, 104 for, 78 against. A member rising, addresses the Chair, to say,

Speaker, it is nine o'clock. The hour for private bills is exhausted. "Vote, vote," shout members. The Speaker rises, and at once there is silence. One feels how tensely the House awaits his decision. The Speaker says: "The motion adopted was that the previous question be put now. I consider that a mandate, and that whether or not it is after nine o'clock, the procedure must be completed, and the vote taken forthwith." It was, the result being 100 for, 85 against. So closed the most exciting and eventful day of the session.

The Prime Minister consulted Mr. Bennett and Mr. Gardiner regarding the possibility of hurrying the session through on the understanding that the revision of the Pensions Act, and of the Canadian Grain Act and other slightly less important measures would be passed first. One can clearly see that no further serious work will be done by this Parliament. The announcement of the election has transferred all interest in the constituencies. The remainder of the week has been dull and uneventful.

I greatly enjoyed addressing the teachers-in-training at the Normal School on the work of the League as I observed it when attending the assembly last September. They were exceedingly keen. Such groups of eager, resourceful and altruistic young people give one hope.

Sincerely,
Agnes C. Macphail.

The world knows nothing of its greatest men.—Sir Henry Taylor.

CLUES CONFLICT IN MURDER TALE

"The Canary Murder Case" Excites Public Interest as Dialto Books Moving Picture.

Mystery is stalking in Durham, "Who Killed the Canary?" is the cry of the hour. "The Canary Murder Case," one of the most baffling detective stories ever written, now made into an exciting moving picture by Paramount, will open at the Star theatre this Friday for two days.

Six men are suspected of the murder of the flashing Broadway chorus queen, "The Canary". One person killed her but circumstances and motives are established during the investigation of the crime which point to each of the six men as the murderer. Then the mystery seems to clear when "The Canary's" chorus girl friend is accused of the murder, the motive established and clues uncovered to prove her connection with the murder.

"Who Killed the Canary?" Police are baffled at the daring crime. Detectives scurry hither and yon, questioning, accusing, arresting. Then Philo Vance enters upon the case. Here is the amateur sleuth created by S. S. Van Dine, the famous author hiding behind a pen name, for his series of popular detective stories. Philo Vance, played by William Powell, discovers the true criminal in a unique manner.

"The Canary Murder Case" has everyone guessing. "Who Killed the Canary" is the cry of the hour. Who can solve the mystery?

NOAH'S ARK, MIGHTIEST OF MOTION PICTURES

"Noah's Ark, the picture which Warner Bros. heralded as "made to top any picture ever made," has its premiere at the Star Theatre next Monday night when it comes for a three days' engagement.

Stupendous in conception the production was more than three years in the making and includes in the cast over ten thousand extra characters. The story, which was written by Darryl Francis Zanuck, touches those moments of cataclysmic power between which lie fifty centuries. The characters play their parts in the soul-trying moments at the beginning of the twentieth century and are waded back to the days of Noah—to vast scenes of heathen debauchery—to the building of the Ark—the dark terror of rising waters—which destroyed all but the family of the patriarch. Sets covering more than a square mile were necessary to the production which was directed by Michael Curtis, internationally famed as the director of great spectacles. "Noah's Ark" is a magnificent spectacle altogether enthralling in its scenes of flood and turmoil and in its lighter moods of music and merriment.

Getting Ready for Shriners

Between 30,000 and 40,000 members of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine will meet in Toronto next June under the leadership of Esten A. Fletcher (inset), incoming Imperial Potentate of the Order. Hotels of the city, including the Royal York with its 1184 rooms will be insufficient to meet the demand, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is building a city of sleeping cars to accommodate some 8,000 of the Shriners. "Fox City", as it will be called, will cover 21 acres of land and construction data given out show the tremendous scope of the labor. There will be required 115,000 feet board measure in 50 sets of switch ties weighing 210 tons; 12,500 track ties weighing 800 tons; 20 switches weighing 86 tons; 11 1/2 miles of 85-lb. rail weighing 760 tons; 35,000 tie plates weighing 150 tons; 60 tons of rail fastenings; 30 tons of track spikes; 6 tons of track bolts; 18,000 cubic yards of ballasting for tracks; and 9,000 cubic yards of material for 3 1/2 miles of platforms with a breadth of 14 feet. The city will be fitted with modern conveniences and a building 220 by 20 feet wide will accommodate 100 cold and hot showers. Lighting will require 75,000 watts, enough to supply 14 miles of city residential street lighting power. This electrical work will call for 25 miles of wire strung on 200 poles.
