THE AUSTRALIAN ANT-EATER

Without a doubt, one of the strangest animals in the world is the ant-eater, or, as it is more correctly called, the Echidna, which is still to be found in lonely places in Australia. Its body is covered with sharp spines and coarse hair. During the breeding season, the female lays two eggs, which she carries in her pouch until they are hatched. The young are then fed on milk from their mother until they are grown up, when they feed chiefly on white ants. They have long bills to poke into the mounds in which the ants live, and long, sticky tongues to pick them up.

They are strange looking creatures and at a first glance one would really think they possessed two heads, but such is not the case, the lower head-like front portion of the body being in reality one of the animal's front feet, with its bristly hair attached. The narrow beak-like mouth with tiny snout at end, small eyes and tiny ears are truly a peculiarity; while the large bushy tail sweeping the ground at the back seems almost too big for the animal in proportion to its size.

THE IGUANA IS A LIZARD OF THE NEW WORLD

The average length of the Iguana, a species of lizard, is about four feet, but it often grows to six feet or more. The head is large, and covered with large scales. The mouth is enormously wide, and its edges are studded with peculiar notched teeth. It lives mainly in trees, and, although not a water lizard, it will dive and swim if frightened, being able to remain under water for an hour.

The Iguana does not strike one as being a tasty morsel, but its flesh is really very good to eat, and is said to taste like chicken. In the countries where it lives a dish of Iguana cutlets is considered very fine. The female lays eggs, from which the young are produced, and she lays from four to six dozen. They are considered delicious eating. The female covers the eggs with sand and leaves them to be hatched in the sun.

On account of its usefulness as an article of food, the poor Iguana has a hard time of it, for its eggs are always being stolen from the warm bed in the sun where they are laid. It cannot run very fast, so it is easily captured, but its captors have to be very careful, for it bites fiercely and slashes its long, wicked tail about in a frightening way. The Iguana feeds chiefly upon vegetable substances. It is easily tamed, in spite of its fierceness when chased. Like most other creatures, as soon as it finds someone who is kind to it, instead of wanting to eat it, it becomes quite gentle. Most wild creatures are like that. They cease to be vicious when man ceases to be cruel.

There are many kinds of lizards, varying in size from very small to very large. The real Iguana inhabits the New World. Most lizards are extremely ugly in appearance, but the Iguana seems to know it, for when attacked he faces the enemy and assumes a very threatening attitude.

Our pastor gave us a fine sermon on Sunday from II Corinthians 6:9, "As unknown and yet well known." Those who seek for earthly fame strive to make themselves famous to the world. Christians may seem to be unknown to the praise of men and yet they will be well known as they show forth the spirit of the Master, and then at the judgment day they who have followed Jesus here will be known and received by Him on that great day. He asked in closing if there were any present who were not Christ's disciples and invited them to accept Him now.

COVER THE CANES

Much of the annual winter loss to raspberry plants can be avoided by proper care in protecting them from frost. Horticultural experts of the Dominion Department of Agriculture advise bending the canes over and covering them with sufficient earth to hold them down. As a two-man job this is easily and quickly done at little labor cost. While one gathers the canes and bends them gently to the ground with a fork the other applies sufficient earth to hold them firmly to the ground. On the prairies the best results are obtained when the canes are entirely covered with soil; most of this type of covering can be done by horse labor—hence the desirability of having rows about eight feet apart.
