Listowel Business Growing

The business life of Listowel is having a steady and substantial growth in spite of all the talk of depression, the latest addition being contributed by the Cities Service Oil Company, of Toronto, which has entered into an agreement with the Ideal Supply Co. to become their distributors in the western territory of 180 square miles.

This means that the Ideal Supply Co. are adding to their tank storage capacity at the C. P. R. yards and necessitating their putting several large delivery tank trucks on the road. All tanks, trucks and pumps will be painted white with black lettering. Some of the many lines distributed by Cities Service are Kool Motor gasoline, lubricating oils, fuel oil and kerosene.

This move on the part of the Ideal Supply Co. will bring added publicity to the fact that Listowel is now as always right up at the front line for towns of her size.—Listowel Banner.

A Queer Bath

For the second time within a week, Chief of Police Louis Church was drenched with home-brew in his own office.

It happened this way: When assistants attempted to lift the tops to dispose of twelve bottles of beer used as evidence in a L. C. A. case, there was a sudden explosion. The window was drenched with the foaming liquid. Another bottle boomed forth, and then another. A fourth caught the Chief of Police full in the face. He retreated to the far corner, but even there he could not escape further drenchings.

When all the bottles were drained, Chief Church was soaked. And so were a couple of news-reporters and half a dozen court officials and witnesses of a police court case who were standing in the office at the time.

A week previous several bottles of beer exploded, causing a commotion in the chief's office just before an L.C.A. hearing.—Orillia News Letter.

TRAVELLING IN GOOD OLD DAYS

Travelling in the olden days was a dangerous and sometimes amusing experience, according to P. J. Fybus, Minister of Transport, who quoted history during an address in London recently. He said that Edward I took the coach by degrees, and "tried it on the dog," for when he went to Scotland he himself was carried in a horse litter, while the ladies of the court travelled in coaches.

In the reign of George III, Sidney Smith, recorded that in his coach journey from Taunton to Bath he received from 10,000 to 12,000 contusions. "This," said Fybus, "worked out at one for every eight yards. Possibly on that painful journey Sidney Smith allowed his mind to dwell longingly on the comfortable swinging of the horse litter in the good old days."

THE OLD OFFICE TOWEL

How dear to my mind Is the old office towel, When fond recollection Presents it to view. The much-handled towel, The oft-abused towel, With intimate spots Of red, black and blue. The wide-spreading towel Of immaculate birth, The Editor used it, Printer's devil and all; Though old and seedy, A friend to the needy, The grime-covered towel, Was hailed as a treasure, For often at night, Our dirty work done, We wiped off our hands With exquisite pleasure, And left hieroglyphics With ink spots to run. One day the old towel We noticed was missing, And thought that perchance It was taken to drape, The office cat died, And at its sad funeral, That ebony towel Was then used for crepe. —Grenville Kleiser.
