POINTS ON RAISING HOGS

The superintendent of the Dominion Experimental Station at Windermere, B.C., presents a bit of homely logic in connection with the raising of hogs in a report recently issued, in which he says, "Expensive buildings are not necessary for the successful rearing of pigs. The main points to bear in mind are that the animals should be protected from the storms in winter and the sun in the summer time. The bedding quarters should be dry at all times, and well bedded with straw in winter. At the station a straw shed has given good results, and is preferred by the pigs to the up-to-date piggery. Single-ply cabins if well bedded are quite satisfactory."

WHITE PINE SAFETY ZONE

For the control of White Pine Blister Rust, one of the most serious menaces to our fast vanishing stands of white pine, Dr. H. T. Bussow, Dominion Botanist, urges the rigid application of a safety zone of 900 feet on all sides of such stands, in which no black or red currant or gooseberry bushes should be allowed to grow. These bushes are the intermediary host plants of rust spores.
With their complete eradication over a sufficiently wide area rust spores when formed on the host plants can not be wind-borne back to stands of white pine.

An absent-minded man was unloading his brief case after dinner, preparatory to an evening's work.

His wife (interrupting)—"Have you seen this? There's a report in the paper of your death."

Absent-minded Man—"Is that so? We must remember to send a wreath."
