NEAR EAST SAID TO BE BIRTHPLACE OF "BRIDGE"

There is little definite information as to the origin of the game of "Bridge" or "Bridge Whist" as it was first called. It is thought to have made its first appearance in the clubs of Egypt and Constantinople. The Encyclopedia Britannica states that it is probably of Levantine origin and that if there were any necessity to assign to it a definite nationality, that honor must be awarded to Greece. A pamphlet on the game, published in London in 1886, called it "British or Russian Whist"; however, the word "britch" is not found in any Russian dictionary. The game was introduced into the British and American clubs about 1893 or 1894. According to one theory, the British players of the game in the Near East began to call the game "bridge" because of the privilege of "bridging" or passing the deal to the partner, and Russian followers of the game pronounced the name "britch."
