The Hen's Delusion. Ephraim Knox lived in the center of his native village, and his hens wandered to the frequent annoyance of his neigh bors. Ephraim, however, was no respecter of persons and considered his hens "as good as anybody" and desirable

When it was decided that the town library should be built in a vacant lot "next door to him," Ephraim was filled with pride and joy, and he and his hens superintended operations from the first. Ephraim's brother Seth was not devoted to hens. One day he was passing the site of the library with a friend and stopped to view the progress of affairs. Ephraim's hens were there, cackling away as if their lives depended on it. Seth looked at them in disgust.

"What in the world are those hens making such a noise for, do you suppose? There ain't any grain in there," said the Pa.

"Well," remarked Seth dryly, "they've had the oversight of 'most everything in town. You know the cornerstone of the building was laid yesterday, and I calc'late that speckled ben over there thinks Gambling Houses.

There is a legend among gamblers that ever since gambling houses have been known the hour for beginning play has been 10 a. m. The gambler, unconventional in most things, is a great respecter of long established gambling customs. In no branch of business has there been so little change or so few innovations. Any gambler will tell you there is rarely a morning play of any account, yet they all open at 10 a. m. The hour of closing depends upon the players. A gambling house is never open on Sunday. Saturday night may be extended to daylight Sunday, but that doesn't count. It's Saturday to the gambler. On Sunday there may be some short card playing-hearts, poker, etc., but no gambler who is self respecting will deal bank or turn the wheel on Sunday. That's another of those customs handed down from ancient days, but still a law unto the gambler.
