Five-Hundred Passengers on Board the Steamer but THE VERY LATEST FROM No Lives were Lost.

A despatch from St. John's, Nfld., says: The steamer Lusitania with 500 passengers on board, was wrecked on Tuesday night off Cape Ballard. The steamer originally belonged to the Orient Steam Navigation Company and was bound from Liverpool for Montreal in charge of Captain McNay. The Elder-Dempster Company own the vessel, but at present it is chartered by the Franco-Canadian Steamship Company. The passengers of the Lusitania had a terrible experience. The first knowledge which they had of the disaster was when, owing to the ship raising over the rocks, they were all hurled from their beds by the shock.

An Almost Entirely Forest Country-Most Wonderful Falls In Europe.

You must journey eternally through pines, firs and silver larches: a lovely combination-monotonous, perhaps, but with the ever-changing monotony of the sea. The forest air is of unequalled purity and clearness; the sky of the softest and most kindly blue; the sunsets and twilightthe nights of June, July and early August know only twilight-incomparable. A fine night in Lappland is not to be forgotten-a sky shot with colors from blue and green to red, and the trees and hills outlined against it in black-chiselled silence.

A curious feature of Lappland, to a summer traveller in the valleys, is that there are so few Lapps. Some are employed on the farms of the Swedish settlers who form the scanty population of the country, but the rest are herding their reindeer in nomad camps far up in the mountains. Those who are left are generally elders, who cannot bear the wandering They are strangely clad in a long coat and leggings of reindeer skin, with boots turning up into a point at the toe, and bound at the ankle with cloth bands. A highpeaked hat of cloth completes the picture, and men and women are dressed alike, save that the difference is marked by the color of the boot-bands. A widow, however, assumes those of her dead husband. The farmers (who are all Swedes) must compress all their farm work into the short summer. This makes it somewhat difficult for the tourist to get men to act as drivers or boatmen, though the natives are bound by the Government to provide carriages or boats, and books are kept at the various stations in which the traveller must enter his name and the number of horses or rowers that he employs. This also explains the reason for the apparent guest, or seem anxious to keep him, yet their kindness and attention when their interest is won are unsurpassed. The accommodation at the smaller stations is scanty, and a party of three is the greatest number that can be conveniently accommodated in the houses.

The men are permitted to play as much as they please in their leisure hours, but it is not until after ten o'clock at night, the hour for "turning-in," that they are able to gamble without detection by the officers. Then hammocks are discarded for seats round a wooden chest, and by the light of an old lantern 'loo," "Nap," and "banker" are kept up often into the small hours of the morning, or until a lucky player succeeds in breaking the bank. This, however, rarely happens, because the stakes played for are never more serious than a few pence; nevertheless, by the time the next monthly pay-day comes round it is not un-
