How many boys spend five cents a day foolishly?

How many boys can afford to squander even five cents a day out of the wages they get?

How many boys contract debts they will never be able to pay just because they indulge in small extravagances?

How many boys know that a hundred cents make a-dollar, and that all the great things are nothing more than the sum total of a number of little things? Every reflective head will find a lesson in these questions.

It is difficult we know to put old heads on young shoulders, and we wouldn't want to do it if we could, but we certainly feel anxious to drop an occasional hint that will benefit someone.

It is not to be inferred from what we have said that young people should be deprived altogether of pocket-money, but as a first principle of economy and thrift, a boy or girl should be required to give a strict account, if called for, of the disposal of every cent. In other words a strict cash account should be kept and every entry should be an honest
