Death of Mrs. Frost.

On Friday, February 13th, Mrs. thanking the government for such Mary Frost, widow of the late John Frost, died at Sheldon Place, her residence in the south end of the town. Mrs. Frost was in her eighty-eight: year, being born in South Wales, England, in 1815. She married the late John Frost in 1833, but her husband predeceased her her almost a third of a century ago. They resi et in Bytown (now Ottawa) for twelve years, and then decided to come to the Georgian Bay district, which was being boomed to a remarkable extent at that time. The journey to Owen Sound was decided upon in 1844 but as the steamer was laid up on which the family had hoped to make the journey, they started for Ow-n Sound overland. The trip from Toronto to Holland Landing was made by wagon, and when one consideres that the roadway in those days was in a deplorable condition, some estimate may be formed of the hardships of the journey. A boat carried the pioneers to Orillia, and the wagon trail was again resorted to as far as Coldwater. A sail boat was the next agency which carried them to Penetang, where a British war sloop was lying in the harbor, and a company of British regulars occupied the barricks. After some delay, p. ssage for Owen Sound (then the village of Sydenham) was secured from Capt. Harkley, on his lumber laden sloop. In the open they encountered a storm and put into Meaford for shelter. Finally they arrived in safety outside the bar of the Sydenham river, where they were transferred to a smaller boat and taken up a landing just south of where Division street bridge is now located, and which was opposite the residence of the late George McDougall, who afterwards distinguished himself in the Western mission field. At that time Owen Now, a word to the correspo dent | Sound, or more properly the village of Saugeen Valley. Thirteen children resulted from the union, of whom five survive, as well as twenty-three grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren. The surviving members of the family are John W. Frost, ex-mayor of Owen Sound and town solicitor; William Frost of Oshawa; James A. Frost, of Owen Sound; Mrs (Rev.) Green, of | Clinton, and Miss Nellie Frost who is at home. The late County Crown Attorney Frost was also a son of the venerable lady. Mrs. Frost was a member of the First Methodist church, and her life was one continuous Christian example.
