THIS WEEK

anticipates every possible need of home and family, but instead of trying to make all the money we can, prices are made lowest when you are likely to need the goods. At times we buy very large quantities for cash. These we expect to sell quickly, so as to make room for other regular purchases. This gives manufacturers an outlet for their goods and a chance to turn their surplus stock into money. That explains the presence here of many bargains which seems almost impossible and helps us to offer these money saving attractions.
