Standard Bank of Canada.

HEAD OFFICE, TORONTO. G. P. REID. - - MANAGER

Capital Authorized ... $2,000.000 Paid Up ..... 1.000.000 Reserve Fund ...... 850.000

Agencies in all principal points in Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, United States and England.

DURHAM AGENCY.

A general Banking business transacted. Drafts issued and collections made on all points. Deposits received and interest allowed at cutrent rates.

THE SAVINGS BANK.

Interest allowed on Savings Bank deposits of $1 and upwards. Prompt attention and every facility afforded customers living at a distance.

J. KELLY, Agent.

Furniture

That is sure to please can always be purchased here.

GNDERTAKING PRICES CUT Also a First Class Hearse always in connection. Embalming a specialty.

DURHAY JACOB KRESS.

MATERIAL SECTION OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

BINDERS. Mowers, Rakes, U. S. Cream Separators, and dien by the name of their mothers. Cameron & Dunn Hay Forks

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, ROBES and COATS.

FOR SALE.

Call and see the Ferguson ply, I was alone, riding midway be-

JOHN CLARK

(McKinnon's old Stand)

- ONTARIO. DURHAM.

Machine Oil, Harness Oil, Axle Grease and Hoof Ointment, go to

S. P. SAUNDERS

The Harnessmaker

Groceries

For the Millons. We have a fine assortment of the best GROCERIES which we are prepared to sell at right prices. These are not cheap goods which are dear at any price, but the very best that money can buy. They include Currants, Raisins, Lemons, Oranges, Peels, Teas, Coffees and all kinds of Spices.

> Any quantity of APPLES, mostly Spies and A1 fruit.

GENERAL DRY GOODS, includ ing READY-MADES and SUITINGS, as cheap as the cheapest.

A very Merry Christmas to All.

ONTARIO. DURHAM,

UNDER TWO FLAGS By "OUIDA"

CHAPTER XIII.

EFORE the sun had declined from the zenith the French were masters of the field, and pursued the retreat of the Arabs till for miles along the plain the line of their flight was marked with horses that had dropped dead in the strain, and with the motionless forms of their desert riders. When at length she returned, coming in with her ruthless spahls, whose terrible passions she feared no more than Virgil's Volscian huntress feared the beasts of forest and plain, the raven still hovered above her exhausted mare, the torn flag was still in her left band, and the bright laughter, the flash of ecstatic triumph, was still in her face as she sang the last lines of her own war chant. The leopard nature was roused in her. She was a soldier; death had been about her from her birth; she neither feared to give nor to receive it; she was happy as such elastic, sunlit, dauntless youth as hers alone can be, returning in the reddening afterglow at the head of her comrades to the camp she had saved, while all who remained of the soldiers who, but for her, would have been massacred long ere then, threw themselves forward, crowded round her, caressed and laughed, and wept, and shouted with all the changes of their intense mercurial temperaments, kissed her boots, her sash, her mare's drooping neck, and lifting her, with wild vivas that rent the sky, on to the shoulders of the four tallest men among them, bore her to the presence of the only chief officer of high rank who had survived the terrors of the day. And he, a grave and noble looking veteran, uncovered his head and bowed before her as courtiers bow before their queens.

"Indemoiselle, you saved the honor of Prance. In the name of France, 1 there you."

The mars rushed swift and hot into Wilkinson Plows, Land Rollers, Chartelle's bright eyes-tears of joy, Diamond Smoothing Harrows, today of nicke. She was but a child McGill Grinders, and Dowsell's still in much, and she could be moved Churns, Washers and Weingers, in the name of France as other chil-

"Chat: I did nothing," she said rap-ally "I only rode fast." The fremaied harrahs of the men who heart for drowned her words. They to set her for what she had done; they loved her better still because she set no count on it.

"The empire will think otherwise," said the major of the zonaves. "Tell me my little one, how did you do this

C.....ette, balancing herself with ? foot on either shoulder of her supporters, gave the salute and answered:

"Simply, my commander, very sim-SLOOP SLEIGH, Manufactured | tween you and the main army-three in Owen Sound, before buying, leagues, say, from each. I was all alone; only Vole-qui-veut flying with me for fun. I met a colon. I knew the man. For the matter of that I did him once a service-saved his geese and his fowls from burning one winter's day in their house, while he wrung his hands and looked on. Well, he was full of terror and told me there was him lying here." fighting yonder-here he meant-so I rode nearer to see. That was just upen sunrise. I dismounted and ran up a paim there." And Cigarette pointed to a faroff slope crowned with the remains of a once mighty palm forest. "I got up very high. I could see miles round. I saw how things were with you. For the moment I was coming straight to you. Then I thought should do more service if I let the main army know and brought you a re-enforcement. I rode fast. Dieu! I rode fast. My horse dropped under me twice, but I reached them at last, and I went at once to the general. He guessed at a glance how things were, and I told him to give me my spahis and let me go. So he did. I got on a mare of his own staff, and away we came. It was a near thing. If we had been a minute later, it had been all up with you."

"True, indeed," muttered the zouave in his beard. "A superb action, my little one. But did you meet no Arab scouts to stop you?"

Cigarette laughed. "Did I not? Met them by dozens. Some had a shot at me; some had a shot from me. One fellow nearly winged me, but I got through them all somehow. Sapristi! I galloped so fast I was very hard to hit flying. Those things only require a little judgment. But some men always are creeping when they should fly and always are scampering when they should saunter, and then they wonder when they make flasco. Bah!"

And Cigarette laughed again. "Men were such bunglers. Ouf!" "Mademoiselle, if all soldiers were like you," answered the major of zouaves curtly, "to command a battalion would be paradise."

"All soldiers would do anything I have done," retorted Cigarette, who never took a compliment at the expense of her "children." "They do not all get the opportunity. Opportunity is a little angel. Some catch him as he goes; some let him pass by forever. You must be quick with him, for he is like an eel to wriggle away. If you want a good soldier, take that aristocrat - that handsome Victor. Pouf!

All his officers were down, and how splendidly he led the troop! He was going to die with them rather than surrender. Napoleon"-and Cigarette uncovered her curly head reverentially. as at the name of a deity-"Napoleon would have given him his brigade ere this. If you had seen him kill the chief."

"He will have justice done him, nev er fenr. And for you-the cross shall be on your breast, Cigarette, if I live over tonight to write my dispatches."

And the major saluted her once more and turned away to view the carnage strewn plain and number the few who remained out of those who had been wakened by the clash of the Arab arms in the gray of the earliest dawn. Cigarette's eyes flashed like sun playing on water, and her flushed cheeks grew scarlet. Since her infancy it had been her dream to have the cross to lie above her little lion's heart. It had been the one longing, the one ambition, the one undying desire, of her soul, and, lo, she touched its realization.

The wild, frantic, tumultuous cheers and caresses of her soldiery, who could not triumph in her and triumph with her enough to satiate them, recalled her to the actual moment. She sprang down from her elevation and turned on them with a rebuke. "Ah, you are making this fuss about me while hundreds of better soldiers than I lie yonder. Let us look to them first. We will play the fool afterward."

And, although she had ridden 50 miles that day if she had ridden one, though she had eaten nothing since sunrise and had only had one draft of bad water, though she was tired and stiff and bruised and parched with thirst, Cigarette dashed off as lightly as a young goat to look for the wounded and the dying men who strewed the plain far and near.

She remembered one whom she had not seen after that first moment in which she had given the word to the squadrons to charge.

It was a terrible sight-the arid plain, lying in the scarlet glow of sunset, covered with dead bodies, with mutilated limbs, with horses gasping and writhing, with men raving like mad creatures in the torture of their wounds. She had seen great slaughter often enough, but even she had not seen any struggle more close, more murderous, than this had been. The dead lay by hundreds, French and Arab locked in one another's limbs as they had fallen when the ordinary mode of warfare had failed to satiate their violence, and they had wrestled together like wolves fighting and rending one another over a disputed carcass.

"Is he killed? Is he killed?" she thought as she bent over each knot of motionless bodies where here and there some faint stifled breath or some moan of agony told that life still lingered beneath the huddled, stiffening heap. And a tightness came at her heart. An aching fear made her shrink as she raised each hidden face that she had never known before. "What if he be?" she said fiercely to herself. "It is nothing to me. I hate him, the cold aristocrat. I ought to be glad if I see

But, despite her hatred for him, she could not banish that hot, feverish hope that cold, suffocating fear which, turn by turn, quickened and slackened the bright flow of her warm young blood as she searched among the slain. A dog's moan caught her ear. She turned and looked across. Upright among a ghastly lot of men and chargers sat the small, snowy poodle of the chasseurs, beating the air with its little paws as it had been taught to do when it needed anything and howling piteously as it begged.

"Flick-Flack! What is it, Flick-Flack?" she cried to him, while, with a bound, she reached the spot. The dog leaped on her, rejoicing. The dead were thick there-10 or 12 deep-French trooper and Bedouin rider flung across one another, horribly entangled with the limbs, the manes, the shattered' bodies of their own horses. Among them she saw the face she sought as the dog eagerly ran back, caressing the hair of a soldier who lay underneath the weight of his gray charger that had been killed by a musket ball.

Cigarette grew very pale, as she had never grown when the hailstorm of

She forced the end between his lips

shots had been pouring on her in the of the setting sun, then passed the midst of a battle, but, with the rapid skill and strength she had acquired long before she reached the place, lifted aside first one, then another, of the lifeless Arabs that had fallen above him and drew out from beneath the suffocating pressure of his horse's weight the head and the frame of the chasseur whom Flick-Flack had sought out and guarded.

For a moment she thought him dead. Then, as she drew him out where the cool breeze of the declining day could reach him, a slow breath, painfully drawn, moved his chest. She saw that he was unconscious from the stifling oppression under which he had been buried since noon. An hour more without one touch of fresher air and life would have been extinct.

Cigarette had with her the flask of brandy that she always brought on such errands as these. She ferced the end between his lips and poured some down his throat. Her hand shook slightly as she did so, a weakness the gullant little campaigner never before then had known.

It revived him in a degree. He breathed more freely, though beavily and with difficulty still, but gradually the deathly leaden color of his face was replaced by the bue of life, and his heart began to beat more londly. Consciousness did not return to him. He lay motionless and senseless, with his head resting on her lap and with Flick-Flack in eager affection, licking his bands and his hair. "He was as good as dead, Flick-Flack, if it had not been for you and me," said Cigarette, while she wetted his lips with more brandy. "Ah, bah! And he would be more grateful, Flick-Flack, for a scornful scool from mi-

Still, though she thought this, she let his head lie on her lap, and as she looked down on him there was the glisten as of tears in the brave, sunny eyes of the little Friend of the Flag.

"He is so handsome, so handsome!" she muttered in her teeth, drawing a silklike lock of his hair through her hands and looking at the stricken strength, the powerless limbs, the bare chest, cut and bruised and heaved painfully by each uneasy breath. She was of a vivid, voluptuous, artistic nature; she was thoroughly womanlike in per passions and her instincts, though she so fiercely contemped womanhood. It he had not been beautiful, she would never have looked twice at him, never once have pitied his fate.

And be was beautiful still, though his hair was heavy with dew and dust, though his face was scorched with powder, though his eyes were closed as with the leaden weight of death and his beard was covered with the red stains of blood that had flowed from the lance wound on his shoulder.

The restless movements of little Flick-Flack detached a piece of twine passed around his favorite's throat; the glitter of gold arrested Cigarette's eyes. She caught what the poodle's impatient caress had broken from the string. It was a small blue enamel medallion bonbon box with a hole through it by which it had been slung-a tiny toy once costly, now tarnished, for it had been carried through many rough scenes and many years of hardship. had been bent by blows struck at the breast against which it rested, and was clotted now with blood. Inside it was a woman's ring of sapphires and opals.

She looked at both close in the glow

The matter of feed is of of her kept her vigil over him. tremendous importance to the Wrong feeding is Right feeding is profit.

The up-to-date farmer knows what to feed his cows to get the most milk, his pigs to get the most pork, his hens to get the most eggs. Science.

But how about the children? Are they fed according to science, a bone food if bones are soft and undeveloped, a flesh and muscle food if they are thin and weak and a blood food if there is anemia?

Scott's Emulsion is a mixed food; the Cod Liver Oil in it makes flesh, blood and muscle, the Lime and Soda make bone and brain. It is the standard scientific food for delicate children.

Send for free sample. Be sure that this pictare in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

50c. and $1; all druggists.

Scott&Bowne CHEMISTS,

string through and fastened the box afresh. It was a mere trifle, but it sufficed to banish her dream, to arouse her to contemptuous, impatient bitterness with that new weakness that had for the hour broken her down to the level of this feverish folly. He was beautiful-yes! She could not bring herself to hate him; she could not help the brimming tears blinding her eyes when she looked at him stretched senseless thus. But he was wedded to his past; that toy in his breast, whatever it might be, whatever tale might cling to it, was sweeter to him than her lips would ever be. Bah! There were better men than he. Why had she not let him lie and die as he might under the pile of dead?

"You deserve to be shot-you!" said Cigarette, fiercely busing herself as she put his head off her lap, and rose abruptly and shout I to a Tringlo who was at some distance searching for the wounded. ". ere is a chasseur with some breath in him," she said, curtly, as the man with his mule cart and its sad burden of half dead, moaning, writhing frames drew near at her summons. "Put him in. Soldiers cost too much training to waste them on jackals and kites, if one can help it.

Lift him up! Quick!" "He is badly hurt," said the Tringlo. She shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh, no! I have had worse scratches myself. The horse fell on him; that was the mischief. Most of them here have swallowed the leaden pill once and for all. I never saw a prettier thing-every lascar has killed his own little knot of Arbicos. Look how nice and neat they look."

She was not going to have him imagine she cared for that chasseur whom he lifted up on his little wagon with so kindly a care-not she! Cigarette was as proud in her way as was ever the Princess Venetia Corona.

Nevertheless she kept pace with the mules, carrying little Flick-Flack, and never paused on her way, though she passed scores of dead Arabs, whose silver ornaments and silk broideries, commonly after such a fantasia, replenished the knapsack and adorned in profusion the uniform of the young filibuster, being gleaned by her right and left as her lawful harvest after the

"Leave him there. I will have a look at him," she said at the first empty tent they reached. Cigarette, left alone with the wounded man, lying insensible still on a heap of forage, ceased her song and grew very quiet. She had a certain surgical skill, and she dressed his wounds with the cold, clear water and washed away the dust and the blood that covered his breast.

"He is too good a soldier to die. One must do it for France." she said to herself in a kind of self apology. And as she did it and bound the lance gash close and bathed his breast, his forehead, his hair, his beard, free from the sand and the powder and the gore a thousand changes swept over her mobile face. It was one moment soft and flushed and tender as passion; it was the next jealous, fiery, scornful, pale and full of impatient self disdain.

He was nothing to her! He was an aristocrat, and she was a child of the people. She had been besieged by dukes and had flouted princes. She had borne herself in such gay liberty. such vivacious freedom, such proud and careless sovereignty - bah, what was it to her whether this man lived or died? If she saved him, he would give her a low bow as he thanked her, thinking all the while of miladi. And yet there she staid and watched him She took some food, for she had been fasting all day. Then she dropped down before the fire she had lighted and in one of those soft, curled, kittenlike attitudes that were characteristic

She was bruised, stiff, tired, longing like a tired child to fall asleep. Her eyes felt bot as flame, her rounded. supple limbs were aching, her throat was sore with long thirst and the sand that she seemed to have swallowed till no draft of water or wine would take the scorched, dry pain out of it. But, as she had given up her fete day in the hospital, so she sat now-as patient in the self sacrifice as she was impatient when the vivacious agility of her young frame was longing for the frenzied delights of the dance or the battle. Every now and then, four or five times in an hour, she gave him whom she tended the soup or the wine that she kept warm for him over the embers. He took it without knowledge, sunk half in tethargy, half in sleep, but it kept the life glowing in him which, without

She dropped down before the fire. it, might have perished of cold and exhaustion as the chill and northerly wind of the evening succeeded to the heat of the day and pierced through the canvas walls of the tent. It was very bitter, more keenly felt because of the previous burning of the sun. Toronto, Ontario. There was no cloak or covering to fling over him. She took off her blue cloth tunic and threw it across his chest and

Liver Pills

That's what you need; something to cure your biliousness. and regulate your bowels. You need Ayer's Pills. Vegetable; gently laxative. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use shivering despite hersen, carled closer to the little fire.

She did not know why she did it-he was nothing to her-and yet she kept berself wide awake through the dark autumn night lest be should sigh and stir and she not hear bim.

"I have saved his life twice," she thought, looking at him. "Peware of the third time, they say!"

He moved restlessly, and she went to him. His face was flushed now; his breath came rapidly and shortly; there was some fever on him. The linen was displaced from his wounds. She dipped it again in water and laid the cooled bands on them. "Ah, bah! If I were not unsexed enough for this, how would it be with you now?" she said in her teeth. He tossed wearily to and fro. Detached words caught her ear as he muttered them:

"Let it be; let it be! He is welcome! How could I prove it at his cost? I saved him. I could do that. It was not much"-

She listened with intent anxiety to near the other whispers ending the sentence, but they were stifled and broken. "Listen!" she murmured below her breath. "It is for some other he has ruined himself." She could not catch the words that followed. They were in an unknown language to her, for she knew nothing of English, and they poured fast and obscure from his lips as he moved in feverish unrest; the wine had saved him from exhaustion, inflaming his brain in his sleep. Now and then French phrases crossed the English ones. She leaned down to seize their meaning till her cheek was against his forehead, till her lips touched his hair, and at that half caress her heart beat, her face flushed, her mouth trembled with a too vivid joy, with an impulse, half fear and half longing, that had never so moved her before.

"If I had my birthright," he murmured in her own tongue-"if I had it, would she look so cold then? She might love me-women used once. O God, if she had not looked on me I had never known all I have lost!"

Cigarette started as if a knife had stabbed her and sprang up from her rest beside him. "She-she-always she!" she muttered fiercely, while her face grew duskily scarlet in the fire glow of the tent, and she went slowly away, back to the low wood fire. This was to be ever her reward. Her eyes glistened and flashed with the fiery, vengeful passions of her hot and jealous instincts, yet she did not leave him. She was too generous for that. "What is right is right. He is a soldier of France," she muttered, while she kept her vigil. He did not waken from the painful, delirious, stupefied slumber that had fallen on him. He only vaguely felt that he was suffering pain; he only vaguely dreamed of what he murmured-his past and the beauty of the woman who had brought all the memories of that past back to him. And this was Cigarette's reward-to hear him mutter wearily of the proud eyes and of the lost smile of another! The dawn came at last. Her constant care and the skill with which she had cooled and dressed his wounds had done him infinite service. The fever had subsided, and toward morning his incoherent words ceased, his breathing grew calmer and more tranquil. He fell asleep-sleep that was profound, dreamless and refreshing. She looked at him with a tempestuous shadow darkening her face that yet was soft with a tenderness that she could not banish. She hated him She ought to have stabbed or shot him rather than have tended him thus. He neglected her and only thought of the woman of his old order. As a daughter of the people, as a child of the army, as a soldier of France, she ought to have killed him rather than have caressed his hair and soothed his pain.

Then gently, very gently, lest she should waken him, she took her tunic skirt with which she had covered him from the chills of the night, put more broken wood on the fading fire and with a last lingering look at him where he slept passed out from the tent as the sun rose in a flushed and beautiful dawn.

"He will never know," she said to berself as she passed through the disordered camp and in a distant quarter coiled herself among the hay of a forage wagon and, covered up in dry grass like a bird in a nest, let her tired limbs lie and her aching eyes close in repose. She was very tired, and every now and then as she slept a quick, sobbing breath shook ber as she slumbered like a wornout fawn that has been wounded while it played.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Refused. "Yes, he proposed to Miss Coke while they were standing at the edge of one of her father's deepest coal mines." "And what did she do?"

"She threw him down."-Clevelan Plain Dealer.

While we never trouble trouble trouble troubles us, still we kept waiting long between we? At tournate