AN AUSTRALIAN IN CANADA.

Letter From Mr. James Bolger.

(From the Wagga Advertiser, Australia.)

Edge Hill, Ont., Canada, 11/5/07.
According to promising a few days previous to my leaving Australia, "I herewith enclose you a letter for the 'Advertiser.'"

Starting from Sydney on March the 19th, in the Oceanic Steamship Company's s. s. Ventura, we had an uneventful run to Auckland, save that it was remarkably slow. We stayed at Auckland 24 hours, but as this is too close to Australia to be interesting, I will pass it over. Another run of eight days from here and we arrive at Pango Pango (pronounced Pago Pago) a beautiful tropical island in the Pacific. It is about 11 a. m. on Good Friday as we steam slowly through a narrow inlet, and, oh what a beautiful sight! On both sides are to be seen the wild orange and lemon trees, the cocoanuts and the bananas growing right from the water's edge, and as far as we can see right up to the top of the mountains, apparently from three to four thousand feet in height. The population of this luxuriant and fertile little island is only some 1500 natives all told. We spent the afternoon here on shore, and Good Friday being a holiday with the Missionary schools we had the pleasure of seeing a lot of the natives assemble and playing a cricket match. They are very powerfully built, muscular and active; neither men nor women wearing anything about the waist. Previous to our departure (9 p. m.) about a dozen native girls came on board and entertained us with a dance, which I can not say is even graceful, the whole body, head and arms, being in motion more than the head and feet.

Another nine days from here and we arrive at the "Paradise of the Pacific," Honolulu, but, unfortunately, it is a very cold day (they told us it was the coldest day of the year) and we did not see the beautiful place to advantage. I visited the place sixteen years ago, and where there was a beautiful village on the island is now a great city of Uncle Sam's. Give me the beautiful little village on the island in preference to the great city. The latter savors too much of the almighty dollar.

I omitted to mention that we took on Squires at Auckland, and here at Honolulu he is beseged by an army of press reporters, who board the ship almost before she pulls up at the wharf, and let me tell you right here, as the Americans say, that nothing annoys the genial Bill more than anything of this sort. He is without doubt the most unassuming man on the ship. There are several on board both ladies and gentlemen, who abhor the thought of a "brutal prize fight," and who, after making Squire's acquaintance, feel almost ashamed of themselves. However, we will now pass Honolulu and Squires over, and imagine yourself with me entering the Golden Gate after a run of eight days. (We were nearly 30 days coming from Sydney, being nine days over time.) Here again is another army of reporters, after Squire's scalp, sketching him and photographing him on deck. While poor Bill is trying in every conceivable manner to dodge them. His manager (Barney Reynolds) is with him, and hurries him off as fast as possible, and as far as possible, from the excited crowd.

Now we are landed, and oh! what a sight. What an awful sight. Although to-morrow will be the anniversary of the great disaster, still it appears to us as if it only happened yesterday. Though the Americans, with their wonderful activity, energy and perseverance have raised during that short year hundreds of buildings and some of them immense skyscrapers, yet there still appears on all sides the awful effects of that dreadful day. For whole blocks on either side are to be seen nothing but one mass of fallen bricks and crumpled up iron, with occasionally the steel walls of some great skyscraper standing like a monument amongst its dead comrades. Two days we stay here, when we move south via Santa Barbara to Los Angeles. This latter town is 480 miles south from San Francisco, and is situated in the centre of the great fruit growing districts of California. All along the route from Frisco can be seen the great orange groves stretching for miles on either side, together with almost all other fruits of the world. I did not happen to pass through any of the great wheat fields that we hear so much about, therefore, will have to disappoint a good many of the "Advertiser" readers for the present any way.

Staying two days in Los Angeles, we again moved East, and after the first two hundred miles we emerged into the great Arizona desert, which stretches from within 200 miles of the coast to within 100 miles of Kansas City, a distance of 1500 miles, but before passing over this desert, I must not omit to mention the most wonderful of all sights since leaving Sydney, viz., the "Grand Canyon." This is a great opening in the earth, as it were, or "canyon," as the Americans call it, averaging 14 miles wide, 270 miles long, and 5,800 feet deep. There is a special line built to it off the main line, 63 miles long, and it is visited by tourists from all parts of the world. We, of course, took the trip, and stayed over two days. It is verily a wonderful sight, and (as I wrote in the visitors' book coming away), "worth coming all the way from Australia to see." The first night we are here we all look for our ride down the great gorge in the morning, for to see the Great Canyon one must ride down to the bottom on a mule. Here are 41 of us in charge of four guides, each guide taking charge of about 10 tourists, but we all start off one behind another on those miserable looking animals, and included in our party are 17 ladies, who all have divided skirts handed out to them previous to starting. (All ladies here ride astride). Well, off the 41 of us start walking one behind another, and immediately we start to descend. Oh, will I ever forget it! The distance we have to travel to get to the bottom of the Canyon is seven and a half miles, and from the top where we start, can be seen, like a little streak of white, like a white line drawn across black paper the stream of water which, when we finally arrive at it, proves to be 100 yards wide. I call the mules "miserable looking animals," for should he make a false step you are in stern ty. Cut into the ledge of a great perpendicular precipice is a track about two feet nine inches wide, and along this that slow but sure animal safely walks with you, the guide in front all the time looking back to see that all is safe, and occasionally cautioning the ladies not to look over. Well, I am sure I am not the greatest coward in the world myself but by heavens, I was frightened to look over. There was an Australian lady made the descent with us, and she told me afterwards that once started and on the trail she could do nothing else but resign herself to fate and to "the mules." There was a photographer who ran ahead of us along the trail with his camera, and snapped us in about twenty different places and positions. I have some of the pictures and will bring them to Australia with me.

Leaving the Grand Canyon we journey East to Kansas City, thence South to St. Louis, then North to Chicago, where we stay two days visiting the great stock yards, and inspecting thoroughly the slaughtering and packing, &c. (did not see any of the men go through though.) These works cover an area of one square mile, and 27,000 people are employed. Moving East again, via Cleveland, Buffalo and Niagara Falls, we finally arrive at dear old Toronto, where 14 years ago I committed the crime of kidnapping a person and taking her to Australia, and for the present, dear Editor and Australian friends, farewell.

Yours faithfully,
JAMES BOLGER.

P. S.—I omitted to mention (and it may be of interest to Australians) that both here and in the States they are having an unprecedented long winter—the oldest inhabitant never saw the like before. When leaving Australia I intended arriving here when all the cold weather was over, and never dreamed of seeing snow, but getting out of bed the first morning in Toronto, our little girl, Nellie, came running into the room exclaiming: "Oh, Muma, come here. What's all this white thing outside," and sure enough it was a heavy fall of snow. Then again, five days later (9 of May), we had another still heavier fall in Durham.

Fell in Well and Drowned.

(Kincardine Review)

A melancholy accident happened on the farm of John Campbell, Durham Road, Kincardine Tp., on Wednesday when Miss Annie Campbell fell into a well near the house and was drowned. The well was 18 feet deep with ten feet of water in it and was stoned. No one saw her fall into it, but apparently she fell into it head first. When she was missed, search was made for her and Peter Peterbaugh discovered her. The funeral on Friday was very large. The deceased lady was a sister of Dan and John Campbell, of the Durham Road, and was unmarried. She was 55 years of age.
