YE Editor received a telephone message from Thornbury on Thursday last announcing the unexpected death of a niece who had succumbed to an operation for appendicitis performed the day previous. We have but very few particulars and we regret that circumstances at that particular time were such that we could not well get away to attend the funeral.

"PRACTICAL Talks on Important Themes." This is the title of a beautiful book presented to us as a memento by Rev. H. T. Crossley, the author. It is well and beautifully bound in Morocco, gilt top, good paper, excellent letter press, and filled from cover to cover with practical talks as the title suggests. It contains nearly four hundred pages and is a marvel of cheapness at a dollar. May be obtained at the close of the Rink meeting, Thursday night this week.

THERE never was a boy more anxious for a gun than the writer, but we had to take it out in anxiety. The last thought at night and the first thought in the morning was for the coveted gun. We used to dream about guns and gunning, but years and years have passed and we never owned a gun. The shooting season then was not circumscribed by law as it is now. The boy with the gun then had considerable freedom, and anything with hair or feathers on it was a mark for the gunner. There's not much to shoot now, but the boys to-day want guns just the same as the boys of long ago. We have a sort of feeling for the boys who want guns, but we have also a sort of fear for the boys who have guns. The accidents that occur from guns in the hands of some careless sons of guns causes us to feel anxious about boys who have no guns but who keep company with the boys who have guns. It's all right for men to have guns, and it would be well for every farmer to keep a gun, but it isn't safe for a bunch of boys to be fooling around a gun. We would like to see every boy have a gun, too, if we could only feel there was no danger ahead.
