Andrew Byers, an ex-inmate of the House of Refuge and a former prisoner of the Walkerton gaol, is posing These are all dispelled by a few doses in the lime light these days as a star kicker against the Bruce County House of Refuge. He is evidently trying to place Keeper White in the same class of economists as the Keeper of the Markdale House of Refuge. the latter of whom has been openly accused of starving the inmates to keep down expenses. According to Byers, Keeper White is freezing the inmates for the same purpose. At least that is the drift of the following item which appeared in the last issue Lamb ton Street, Lower Town, Durham of the Kincardine Review: "Andrew Byers came over from Walkerton to the House of Refuge for the winter he said that it was too cold for him. He alleges that Mr. White is so anxious to keep down expenses so as to present a good financial account to STRATFORDITES IN LIVINGSTON the Committee that he does not burn enough coal to keep the place comfortably warm "-Bruce Times.

-The story comes from Toronto

that a boy of ten who was addicted to stealing was cured of this bad habit by improving his eye sight We have been long accustomed to the fact that surgical operations on the skull will cure not only insanity -but moral depravity, though there is no certain knowledge of just how the trick may be done. But to cure a weakness for theft by making a lad see more clearly, must surely mean no more than the better eye sight has given the boy more self-respect and so lifted him above the plane of so vulgar an offence against social law. It is a common place of psychology that misfortune leads to crime. People find themselves barred out of the social regard or creature comforts which they think to be theirs by natural right; and they fall into an attitude of rebellion against social convention and law, and decide to get what pleasure they can by defying society. They cannot live happily with law-abiding people of the sort they like; so they not unnaturally propose to get the "benefits" of law breaking. The fear of being caught does not frighten them as it would a successful person; for they feel that they have comparatively little to lose. Dickens taught long ago the philosophy that it is the poor that steal; and he taught it with that sympathetic attitude toward the poor which showed that he was not so very ready to blame them for it. We know now, of course, that it is the very rich who do most of the stealing-the masters of "successful dishonesty." They steal more in a year than all the poor in all the jails have stolen in a hundred years. But there is still truth in the teaching that misfortune drives people to desperate measures, and that it is a perilous thing for society to make men or women-or even childrenfeel uncomfortable in the paths of honesty and virtue.-Ex.
