THE REAL MAN

By J. W. Greenwood

The tendency to-day, in men's actions, if to them there comes a real ugly missile from a fellow-being, is to grasp a like instrument and hurl it back a little harder. In other words, humanity don't like to live up to Scripture—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," but if a man slap you on one cheek, slap him back. Such action does not seem to merit favor in the eyes of conscience. It doesn't apply to the right actions of a real man. Is it not true that any kind of man can give way to passion, lose his head and then regret it? Then what kind of man does God want man to be?

1. God wants a man to be humble. Pride is a ruining force in our churches to-day. There is creeping in a division between the mass and the class. The poor old pioneer, roughly dressed, feels out of place in our services. No matter how good some people pretend to be, when they walk in a poorly-clad individual, these chill him with their pride and sneers. We are apt to forget 'mid the noise and glitter of the present age, that sometimes 'neath the rags, is a heart on fire with the love of God. Poor John Bunyan, the Bedford tinker, at one time looked down upon by the lords and dukes, when dead and gone, had commemorated by this same class, his death.

2. God wants a man to be kind. It is a great thing in the living of this life to lose sight of our own sorrows and cares in serving others. The measure of a man's life is his service, and if we are alive to discovering the real sad things in life, we can soon develop the spirit of kindness. An old professor, in Normal school, in giving us advice how to get along with the people, said, "It always pays to say the nice thing." Not long ago, I walked into a store in an adjoining town, where I was well known, and stepping up to the proprietor, I unconsciously smiled and wished him good-day. Looking at me for a moment, he replied, "If every Christian would wear a smiling face, life would have far more sunshine." "If you can save one heart the aching, or soothe one pain; if you can lift one fainting robin into his nest again, you shall not live in vain."

3. God wants a man to be generous. The spirit of giving is decidedly Christian. How many hearts have beat happily through the Christmas spirit! How many children have delighted with their experience with Santa Claus! Scripture says, "It is better to give than to receive." And in so doing, we must remember that it isn't always the great gifts that count. When Martha anointed the head of Jesus, Christ did not turn away from her generosity. Rather, He said, "She hath done what she could." A poor woman, mother of four children, and but herself to support the home, walked into our house one day, near Christmas time, and presented the teacher with an ordinary, insignificant handkerchief. He accepted the parcel, and in opening it, discovered the trivial gift. What an offering, love-prompted and beautiful! It was done through the generosity of a heart filled with love.

4. God wants a man to be true. It is the flaw in the metal of the car-wheel that spells danger to traffic—and so it is a lack of truthfulness in a man that often causes his downfall. The man to-day, who abuses the temple of the Holy Ghost, who throws his talents hopelessly into the work of serving Satan—is not being true to himself. And how many there are of us who fail to see selfishness as one of our faults, yet would it not be better were we to look more to ourselves, re the advancement of our soul? Besides, man is ever proving false to his fellow-man. Business is calling out for trustworthy employers, humanity are committing their great offices unto the men whom they feel are true. The "I will" of Christ stands for more than the "I will" of man, because the "I will" of Christ always stand for fulfillment. And lastly, we need men who are true to God. What the world lacks to-day are the men with the vision beyond the waving sky-line. The twentieth century is an age of materialism, and people forget to wait on the Spirit. It is religion that casts the real glow upon life, and sheds bright sunbeams into sorrow's chasms. Then let us not forget to put our trust in God. He is willing to stand beside us throughout the conflict, and will be true to us, and, in return, asks us to be true to Him.
