THE DAUGHTER OF DAVID KERR

Continued from page 7. He read it in the proor, and was warmed with a self-satisfied glow to think that he had thought of it. He still lived in the age of personal journalism and to lambast the other fellow personally was part of his editorial creed.

Before the paper came out, Wright telephoned Gloria that he would be unable to drive with her but that he would call in the evening. They had reached the point in their fast friendship where she was not unwilling to put and let him know how disappointed she was.

It was four o'clock when Morrison arrived at the News office with a copy of the proposed franchise. As he threw it on the table in Wright's private office he exclaimed:

"If that goes through, the company can do anything according to its provision except commit murder."

"I suspected as much," replied Wright. "What right of way have they?"

Morrison went to the map of Belmont on the wall and located the city terminus of the proposed line.

"Here's where they start on their own tracks," he explained. "You see, there's a provision in the charter of the Belmont Traction Company whereby any interurban line can use its tracks into the heart of the city upon payment of a fair rental. Here's the Townsend Park Line coming down Bluff Street, and right here where Bluff Street crosses Maple Avenue the Interurban's own tracks will start."

"Then how does it run?" "South on Maple Avenue and Maple road, to a private right of way which begins east of the stock-yards and parallels the county road to Corona."

Wright studied the map earnestly. "You see, I'm too new to know that neighborhood," he said. "Why did they pick Maple Avenue?"
