Lesson X.—Third Quarter, For
Sept. 6, 1914

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xii, 28-34, 41-44—Memory Verses, 29-31—Golden Text, Luke x, 27—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson consists of three parts—the question of the scribe whom Matthew calls a lawyer, Christ's great question and the record of the widow's two mites. The first is recorded by Matthew and Mark, the second by Matthew, Mark and Luke and the third by Matthew and Luke. Having answered and put to silence the Pharisees, Herodians and Sadducees, He is now approached by one of the Pharisees, who was a scribe well acquainted with the law. His question is, "Which is the great commandment in the law?" or "Which is the first commandment of all?"

Here was another tempter, and yet the Lord graciously condescended to answer him. If one came to us in the same spirit and we knew it, would we be gracious enough to make reply? Our Lord left us an example to follow Him in all things. He meekly replied to this critic, quoting from Deut. vi, 4, 5; Lev. xix, 18, the summary of the Ten Commandments, which His own hand had written twice on the tables of stone, that the righteousness which is required of us is to love the Lord our God with all our heart, soul, mind and strength and our neighbor as ourselves, adding, according to Matt. xxii, 40, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." The scribe confessed that He had answered well and said that to do this was more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices, to which Jesus replied, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

The scribe saw more clearly than most of his fellows that God looked for a right heart rather than anything merely outward. He understood the words of Isa. i, 10-15, and all similar words concerning the abomination that Israel's sacrifices were to the Lord because it was all mere form, all outward, without a thought of the forgiveness of their sins or their need of it. In the first sacrifice ever seen on earth man gave God nothing, had no hand in it at all. The Lord Himself did all and provided freely the redemption clothing that man needed (Gen. iii, 21).

The law of God, which is so holy and just and good that man cannot keep it and which has been kept perfectly only by Jesus Christ, who is the true ark of the covenant and the mercy seat, is always intended to lead us to Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. x, 3, 4; xiii, 10). The great and all important question is not what we should do or should not do, what we know or do not know, but what is Jesus Christ to us, what think ye of Christ (Matt. xxii, 42). To these Jews who expected a Messiah, a son of David, but who did not understand the prophecies concerning Him and that He was to be truly a man and yet truly God in one person, the question as to how the Messiah could be David's son and also David's Lord was what might be called a poser for them.

According to Matt. xxii, 42, He asked them, "What think ye of Christ?" (or the Messiah). "Whose son is He?" They replied, "The son of David." Then came the difficult question for them, "How doth David in the Spirit, in the book of Psalms, call Him Lord, saying, 'The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool?' (Ps. cx, 1) Jesus Himself answers the question. In John xvi, 28, He said, "I came forth from the Father and am come into the world." As Mimirriss says in his harmony, the question can only be answered aright as recognizing the fact that Christ proceeded forth and came from His Father in heaven, and thus is David's Lord, while, as being man, He was "of the house and lineage of David" and so was David's son. In Him were united the divine and human natures (John i, 1-14; I John i, 1, 2). One of the very last titles that He gives Himself in the New Testament is "the root and the offspring of David" (Rev. xxii, 16). David came from Him as His Lord, and as man He came from David. He is the Son of Man, inheriting all things, and He is to sit on David's throne (Luke i, 31-33). Personally I am comforted by the fact that as perfect man He knows me thoroughly, and as God He is able to save, to keep and to present me faultless because I have accepted Him as my Saviour.

He had taught them to beware of Pharisees, Sadducees and Herodians, and now He says, "Beware of the scribes," mentioning their desire for praise of men, their seeming religiousness and at the same time their oppression of poor widows whose offering of as little as two mites sometimes counted more in His sight than the abundance of many rich people. The poor widow of our lesson cast in all that she had, even all her living. This drew her very near to Him. When any one says "This is the widow's mite" as they give some trifle to the Lord, say as kindly as possible, "Make it two, or do not mention it, and do not compare it with the Bible story unless it is all you have."

Restless Flat Dwellers.
The restlessness of the flat dweller is a national mystery. Why does he go forth inevitably in the spring to find another flat and to insert his family and furniture therein? As likely as not it is the flat which he abandoned five years before. Since then he has occupied four other flats, each a vast improvement over its predecessor, and he is now delighted with the new flat which he left in disgust five years before. He has spent hundreds of dollars in arriving at this stage of happiness, but he will abandon the flat again next year and fit on in a moving van as large as a small chapel.

We falter, appalled at the task of discovering the flat dweller's purpose until we consider the strangely similar restlessness of the sick man who lies on one side until he can't stand it any longer and then, with the assistance of his devoted family, is turned over on the other side. The change is a delightful relief, although a few hours before he couldn't endure to lie on that side a minute longer.—George Fitch in Collier's Weekly.

The Sewing Machine.
The invention of the sewing machine is one of the most interesting evolutionary romances in the history of human progress. Stone, Henderson and Greenough had experimented extensively with the double pincer idea, one to seize the needle below and one above. Heilmann used a double pointed needle, with the eye in the center, and Thimmonier and Ferrand had invented a chain stitch machine. In 1834 Walter Hunt originated the extension arm idea with a needle similar to the one now in general use, but before he applied for his patent in 1854 he had been forestalled by Elias Howe, who will always be known as the inventor of the sewing machine. If Hunt had not been so great a laggard he might have won fame as an inventor, but Howe is entitled to all the credit that has been given him. Like all great inventions, however, the sewing machine was the product of many minds.

Had Forty Homes.
Villon, the painter, was a unique personage even among the odd characters of Paris. While he was essentially a bohemian, there were times when even his patience was taxed to the utmost, and to obviate the necessity of meeting unwelcome people he conceived the idea of multiplying his lodging places. At the time of his death he owned no less than forty homes, all in apartment houses, situated in all the out of the way corners of Paris, plainly furnished and with just enough accommodation for himself. He changed from one to the other all the time in order to escape importunate acquaintances and to take refuge from his friends. It was in order to throw them all off the scent that he engaged rooms all over the city. He finally died in the Rue de Dunquerque, where he had as many as three different apartments, all within a stone's throw of one another.

The Test of Character.
But responsibility is the great character developer, and very few of us really know what we can do until we are put to the test. The market is long on men who can take orders, but short on those who can intelligently issue them. Responsibility requires a certain amount of initiative—the willingness to act when occasion demands and the courage to fall under honest effort and take the consequences. Of course you may fail, but you can't tell whether you will succeed unless you try, and having tried to the utmost of your ability and failed is better than never to have tried at all—better because in every loss there is the compensation of experience, while mere inaction means mental and physical stagnation, the dam and sire of annihilation.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Very Red Tape.
A burglar entering a house by a ladder in a small Prussian town fell and broke his leg when making off with his booty. An inquiry into the accident revealed that, contrary to the bylaws of the town, the house owner's ladder was not provided with strong iron spikes at its base. The house owner was therefore ordered to pay all the hospital costs and further to give the burglar a substantial sum.—London Standard.

Taking on Trust.
It is far better that we trust and be deceived occasionally than not to trust at all. Not only must we trust one another, but there are many things in life that we must take on trust—things that we do not understand and are mysteries to us. Even love is a mystery.—W. J. Bryan.

When Real Knowledge Comes.
"Mamma," asked a little girl, "how long did you know papa before you married him?"
"My dear," replied the mother, "I was acquainted with your father for several years, but I really didn't know him until after we were married."

The Absent-Minded Beggar

When you've shouted "Rule Britannia"—when you've sung "God Save the Queen"—
When you've finished killing Kruger with your mouth—
Will you kindly stop a shilling in my little tambourine
For a gentleman in khaki ordered South?
He's an absent-minded beggar, and his weaknesses are great—
But we and Paul must take him as we find him—
He is out on active service wining something off a slate—
And he's left a lot o' little things behind him!

Duke's son—cook's son—son of a hundred kings—
(Fifty thousand horse and foot going to Table Bay!)
Each of 'em doing his country's work (and who's to look after their things?)
Pass the hat for your credit's sake and pay—pay—pay!

There are girls he married secret, asking no permission to.
For he knew he wouldn't get it if he did.
There is gas and coal and vittles, and the house-rent falling due.
And it's more than rather likely there's a kid.
There are girls he walked with casual, they'll be sorry now he's gone.

For an absent-minded beggar they will find him;
But it ain't the time for sermons with the winter coming on—
We must help the girl that Tommy's left behind him!

Cook's son—Duke's son—son of a belted Earl—
Son of a Lambeth publican—it's all the same to-day!
Each of 'em doing his country's work (and who's to look after the girl?)
Pass the hat for your credit's sake and pay! pay! pay!

There are families by thousands far too proud to beg or speak—
And they'll put their sticks and bedding up the spout.
And they'll live on half o' nothing paid 'em punctual once a week.

'Cause the man that earned the wage is ordered out.
He's an absent-minded beggar, but he heard his country call,
And his reg-ment didn't need to send to find him;
He chucked his job and joined it—so the job before us all
Is to help the home that Tommy's left behind him!

Duke's job—cook's job—gardener, baronet, groom—
Mews or palace or paper shop—there's some one gone away!
Each of 'em doing his country's work (and who's to look after the room?)
Pass the hat for your credit's sake, and pay! pay! pay!

Let us manage so as later we can look him in the face.
And tell him—that he'd've very much prefer—
That, while he saved the Empire his employer saved his place.
And his mates (that's you and me) looked out for her.
He's an absent-minded beggar, and he may forget it all,
But we do not want his kiddies to remind him
That we sent 'em to the workhouse while their daddy hampered Paul.
So we'll help the home our Tommy's left behind him!

Cook's home—Duke's home—home of a millionaire.
(Fifty thousand horse and foot going to Table Bay!)
Each of 'em doing his country's work (and what have you got to spare?)
Pass the hat for your credit's sake, and pay! pay! pay!
—Rudyard Kipling.

Harvesting is finished in this burg and threshing is now the order of the day. Dr. E. Leeson started the threshing season on Saturday by threshing with Messrs. Patterson and Lawrence. As both are energetic workers, they are likely to get the bulk of the threshing in this vicinity. We are glad to report that Jas. Mellyvide, jr., who has been ill for the past week, is well on the way to recovery.
Norman Kerr is bound to make improvements. He is at present tearing down his sawmill in order to make it more convenient.
Mr. Richard Barber had the misfortune to meet with a bad accident Saturday night. While looking over some machinery in Dr. M. Leeson's barn Mr. Barber fell down an open hatchway and besides dislocating a rib broke a bone in his ankle. We hope to see him around again before long.
School opened on Tuesday under the supervision of Miss M. Petty. There should be no hindrance to the pupils to learn their lessons, as the caretaker's duties have been properly attended to.
