DURHAM, OCTOBER 1, 1914.

THE WAR

The war for the past week has been one continuous pull. Each side is fighting with all the determination at its command.

The German forces are evidently aware they are in a losing game, and one of their great aims is to cause as much destruction as possible.

In the east, the Russians are moving on. They are more successful in their achievements than the Allies in the west.

The German navy is still hid behind her fortifications, and the British fleet is only too anxious to have them in the open seas.
