OUT OF THE DIM PAST.

Scene of Canadian Camp at Salisbury Looms Big In History.

The Canadian force have crossed the channel and are now upon the soil of that land where their forefathers in the days of old fought many a bout and won the famous victories at Crecy, Poitiers and Agincourt. Five hundred years have passed since the latter victory was gained, and now the British cross those same dividing waters once again and land their troops upon the coasts of France, this time not to fight their ancient foes, but, allied with them, to force back a common enemy.

Though now amid the historic scenes of France the Canadians will not forget the spots in old England which they visited while at Salisbury Plain. There is Old Sarum, which, if it could speak, would tell of Druids, Britons and Normans. They will not forget the old cathedral that looks out across those vast plains where for four long months the Canadians lay encamped. Its grandeur has filled them with awe and they have been strangely impressed by the quaint old places that nestle beneath its lofty spire.

The site of Old Sarum is at present under a thorough excavation, undertaken by the Society of Antiquaries. It contained the dwellings of the principal people, of the bishop and clergy, and also contained the cathedral church, which is now in process of excavation.

There are two gates to the outer bailey, one on the east and a smaller one on the west. The former must have had a very imposing appearance, for above it was built the Church of the Holy Cross.

The inner bailey constituted the castle and the principal building of this was the Great Tower, or Donjon. It is known from statistics that it contained royal apartments where the Norman Kings and probably the Plantagenets frequently resided. In the base of the Great Tower was a corridor, probably occupied by the priests who attended the Chapel of St. Nicholas, which was situated in the southwest angle of the tower. At the southeast of the inner bailey are the ruins of a large rough building, in which were found four ovens, thus leading to the supposition that it was a bakery or a store. In this same area was found a partly dug well.

The little information that exists concerning the early history of Old Sarum is chiefly derived from pipe rolls and liberate rolls of the times and from a few other documents. Among them occur orders for repairs to certain buildings, which are mentioned by name, also accounts for the supply of various articles.

From appearances noticed during the excavation, constant alterations and rebuildings must have taken place formerly, but when the castle ceased to exist cannot be very clearly shown. As early as 1276 King Edward I. granted permission for the removal of stone for building a certain part of Salisbury Cathedral. Likewise King Edward III. allowed stone to be taken from the old cathedral to repair the new. In 1338 royal permission was again granted for the removal of stone on a very large scale. From this it may be inferred that from the dates Old Sarum became practically a stone quarry to supply the new city.

The excavations have afforded many interesting objects, such as some fine specimens of glazed jugs, a piece of gold lace, dice, draughtsmen, keys, knife blades, tools, and rings. One ring was a fine, nearly pure gold episcopal ring with an emerald setting.

As was stated above, material was brought from the cathedral of Old Sarum to aid in the construction and repair of the present Salisbury Cathedral. The foundations of this noble pile were laid in 1220 by Bishop Richard Poore. The style is that of the First Pointed, or Early English, and the ground plan is that of a double cross. The building was not completed till 1258. The tower and spire were not added till the 14th century. The point of the spire is 400 feet above the ground.

New Lieutenant-Governor.

Hon. Pierre Evariste Leblanc, K.C., of Montreal, former leader of the Conservative party in Quebec and an ex-Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, who has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, in succession to the late Sir Francois Langeher, is a descendant of an Acadian family that settled at Isle Jesus, Quebec, after the dispersion in 1757. He was born at St. Martin, Que., in 1853 and was educated at Jacques Cartier Normal School and McGill University. He was called to the Bar of Quebec in 1879 and has since practiced law in Montreal, having been created a Q.C. in 1893.

Conservative in politics, he was candidate of that party for the Legislative Assembly in 1882 and sat until 1897. He was elected Speaker in 1892 and held that position for five years. In religion he is a Roman Catholic. He was married in 1886 to Hermine, daughter of the late Theodore Beaudry, of Montreal.

Fifth Generation of Soldiers.

Sergt. Hamilton, who was probably the first member of the Canadian contingent wounded in the trenches in France, is twenty-eight years old and unmarried. He is with the Second Battalion of the First Brigade. He was educated at Upper Canada College, and graduated in law in Toronto last April. He had just entered upon law practice when the war came. He has been on service practically ever since Aug. 4 last, for on that day, on the declaration of war, he was one of the members of the 51st put on guard duty on the Sault Canal. Sergt. Hamilton is the fifth generation of the Hamilton family to serve the British colors, his great-great-grandfather having fought with the British in the American Revolution.
