How They Became Acquainted

By MAY C. ETHERIDGE

Mr. Tinkham came home for dinner tired after a hard day's work. Usually his wife listened for him to come home after business and either met him in the hall or called for him to come upstairs for the connubial kiss. Today she did neither. Mr. Tinkham, hearing or seeing nothing of her, went up to her bedroom. She was sitting before the window with her back to him. "My dear," he said, and paused.

No reply. "What's the matter?"

Without turning she pointed to the bureau. Her husband went to it, and there lay an envelope, unaddressed. He took from it a bit of tissue paper neatly folded. Opening the paper, he uncovered a strand of hair arranged in circular form and fastened with a bit of very narrow blue ribbon.

"Well," he said, "what about it?" "What about it?" rising and facing him. "I found it in the pocket of your overcoat that you left for me to put away for the season."

"My overcoat?" "Yes, your overcoat."

"How did it get there?" "Don't ask me how it got there. You doubtless know how it got there." "Do you mean to tell me that you found that in my overcoat pocket?" "I do."

"Where's the coat?" "There," pointing to a closet.

Mr. Tinkham opened a closet door Miss Oldfield, of the teaching and took from it his winter overcoat. He had bought it at Stevenson's, ready made. It was the same pattern as the Tartan, Egremont, is spending one he had purchased, and the mak- her Easter vacation at her home er's name was on the back. He was here. convinced that he had not exchanged coats with any one. And yet such an exchange was possible. He had lunched at a restaurant, and a waiter had hung his coat on a hook. Some one Miss Bertha Morton is visiting who had bought a suit from Stevenson's, made from the same goods, might have got the Tinkham coat, and known's coat. Mr. Tinkham gave this the present year. solution. It did not work.

Without making any reply Mrs. Tinkham put on her wraps and sailed downstairs and out of the house. Her husband called after her not to make a fool of herself, but come back and help him solve the mystery. She did not beed him.

Mr. Tinkham debated what he should Pa., is visiting at present with Mr. do, then sat down to dinner, hoping that his wife would come back before he had finished. She did not come, and after vainly trying to make out a dinner he arose from the table, put on his bat and overcoat and went out, intending to go to the restaurant where he had lunched and try to discover if any one had exchanged coats with him.

walked aimlessly about for awhile, when she began to feel faint for want of sustenance. Too proud or too vindictive to return to her home, she went to a restaurant to get a cup of tea. There was one best restaurant in the town, where she had often been with her husband, and thither she directed her steps. While sitting at a table a handsome young man stepped up to her, bowed politely and said:

"Is this Mrs. Tinkham?" "It is."

"The proprietor has told me that he on it. This I discovered only half an of a fine type. hour ago and came here to learn where I could find Mr. Tinkham."

The young man held up the counterpart of the coat from which Mrs. Tinkham had taken the lock of hair. Mrs. Tinkham asked him a few questions about the coat, and while she was doing so the young man dropped into a seat opposite her.

Meanwhile Mr. Tinkham, who had been approaching, entered the restaurant at the same time as a young and pretty woman. The lady spied Mrs. Tinkham and the young man sitting at the same table and, with fire in her eye, approached them. Mr. Tinkham, too, saw his wife and followed the lady.

"This is the way you are detained at business," said the latter, "and break your engagements! Please understand that all is off between us."

"And this is the way," cried a voice behind her, addressing Mrs. Tinkham, "that you contrive to meet a lover! A clever device to put a lock of hair in my pocket and then flounce out of the house to come here to keep an appointment."

"A lock of hair!" exclaimed Mrs. Tinkham's companion. "Did I leave a lock of hair in the coat?"

"Whose bair?" cried the young lady vociferonsiy.

"Yours," snapped the young man. "Excuse me, ladies and gentlemen," said the proprietor, who, hearing the wrangle, approached. "I can have no quarreling in my restaurant."

After considerably more talk the matter was finally explained, whereupon Mr. Tinkham proposed that they all have dinner together. The young man introduced himself and his flancee. A good dinner was served, and every one was happy. Later, when they parted, the ladies agreed to exchange calls, and in time they all became fast friends.

"Fruit-a-lives" Healed His Kidneys and Cured Him

HAGERSVILLE, ONT , AUG. 26th 1913. "About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. I felt ·the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them. Their effect, I found more than satisfactory.

Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my oldtime vitality. Today, I am enjoying the best health I have ever had".

B. A. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest Kidney Remedy in the world. It acts on the bowels and skin as well as on the kidneys, and thereby soothes and cures any Kidney soreness.
