SIR SAM HUGHES AND HIS WORK IN MILITIA DEPARTMEN

THE MAN AND HIS JOB

knighted by the King a few weeks ago, and became General Sir Sam Hughes, K.C.B., he only got what was to wonder at about it, it is that he wasn't given his golden spurs before.

Even the ene-3.23 6.28 " Maple Hill " 12.40 10.22 mies of the Minister of Militia-and he has them-admit that to his tireless energy, his unremitting labor and his extraordinary foresight, the remarkable military achievement of Canada is largely due. He has worked night and day; he has made other people work night and day. He is charged with having made mistakes, which charge is DOUBLE TRACK ALL THE WAY proof of his industry, because the only man who never makes mistakes is the man who never does anything at all. But the mistakes, if mistakes they were, have little weight when measured against the tremendous success which has crowned his work in the main object for which he has striven. Not that he has finished, either. He is still working day and night, still planning, organizing and arranging, still looking ahead and preparing for what is yet to come.

> A Peculiar Fitness It is of course perfectly true that the thousands of Canadians who have enlisted for overseas service, have done so of their own free will, and of their own desire and determination to fight for the safety of the Empire against the onrush of the Hun, but it is equally true that they got their opportunity from Sir Sam Hughes. The Prime Minister's offer of a Canadian force, and the readiness of Canadians to enrol themselves in that force, could not have been given effective expression without the practical ability of the Minister of Militia to set things in motion and keep them going. Another man in the office of Minister of Militia would have done some of it, but not all, nor nearly all. Sam Hughes had advantages which fitted him peculiarly for the quick performance of the task entrusted to him. He is a born soldier. He is familiar with the book. He has seen active service. He has travelled over most of the ground in northern France and Belgium, where the western fighting has been done. He knew the sort of a country it was, what sort of soldiers the Germans were, and what sort of soldiers the French were. He knew the British Tommy and the British generals, knew the members of the British Government, or most of them, and what manner of men they were. He knew his own country like a book and he knew his own countrymen from one ocean to the other. In other words he knew the players and all about the game. Could there have been a better man to do what the Germans said could not be done, to "im> provise an army?" How We got Shell Orders General Sir Sam talked to the Ottawa Canadian Club on "The War and Our Duty." He said that Canada had done well in her commercial duty and in her military duty. He said that Canadian manufacturers had risen nobly to the occasion in the manufacture of munitions. Soon after the war began, the British Government asked him if he could secure 200,000 shells in the United States, and although the order was somewhat small he had thought that Canadian establishments could carry out the work, not only to keep the factories going, but to do something in the way of providing work for Canadians at home. The manufacturers of the country were induced to take on the shell-making in-

Modest About Himself Sir Sam did not tell his audience as H(N MARTIN BURRELL Sir Sam Has Abolished the Wet he might truthfully have done, that it was he who persuaded the manufacturers to go into the making of shells, but he did point out the difficulties When General Sam Hughes was which were faced by the manufacturers themselves. These difficulties were by no means small. No one knew how long the war would last, coming to him. If there is anything nor what the requirements in munitions would be. It was not till within the last few months that they had come to realize how necessary was the production of war munitions, and the manufacturers of Canada were ready to turn out whatever quantity the British Government asked them to produce. The Minister pointed out that shell orders were not issued by ponsibility, but under direction of the Canada, he believed, would not fail in her duty when the time came for the overseas army to be increased. There had been no failure in the past, On the contrary, when the first call went forth for 20,000 they got 33,000; when they asked for 50,000 they secured 75,000, and since authority had been given to recruit 150,000 they had She ain't so much! A Fight to a Finish Canada, declared Sir Sam, would never be content with less than a fight to a finish. On the same day that he addressed the Canadian Club, Sir Sam spoke t1 the convention of the Ontario W.C.T.U., when he said that "we will never allow liquor in any of our camps.
