The Year-End Audit

The practical significance of year's end and year's beginning is the human admission that men and women need to divide existence into convenient lengths. Experience has taught the wisdom of establishing fixed terminals along the line of life so that when these are reached we can stop, as it were and take account of ourselves, our hope and our resources and our circumstances. December 31 calls for a look backward. New Year-s Day demands a look forward. To neglect either, that is to ignore the lessons of the past or to blind oneself to the possibilities of the future, is either foolishness or recklessness. Our journals, the daily press and make forecasts of a new period of similar lengths.

We will observe, however, as we read articles, that writers differ in the audits presented in their analysis. Some men are quite hopeless concerning the value of present day social, civic and industrial circumstances. They demand radical changes in government, in class relationship and in the access to labor and to the possession of "wealth". Another group declares that there is nothing new under the sun; that 1934 has been merely another year of time, dur-Mr. and Mrs. T. M. McFadden and ing which economic distress was someof a character similar to earlier years. Society, say such "conservatives" is subject to social forces whose effects, when looked back upon, show periodic rise and fall—cycles of narmalcy, inflation, deflation that are inevitable. Therefore why worry? It always stops raining and drought has likewise an end.

Neither the "radicats", as we have come to call the class who insist upon revision at least and overthrow at most of social, civil, industrial institutions, nor the "reactionaries" as we title the champions of traditions and things as they are deserve outright condemna-The soap box orator, whose fiery denunciation of government, of property that produced him. an audit of past conditions and future survey, we need neglect neither the ultra-radical nor the habitual conservative. Much that has happened in recent years is the result of wrong uses of resources, of covetousness and of selfishness. The radical will tell you what happened. Test his charges. The conservative will claim that what has been evils to which flesh is heir are beyond Binnie. removal. Government cannot be 100 per cent. pure, but it can be purer than much of it has been for a generation. Wealth cannot be entirely rescued from shrewd misuse of it, but access to its distribution and enjoyment cannot be limited to the statesmanship of dead lawmakers. Culture has been commercialized and often made the partner of viciousness. The patient study of education and morality will enable the middle class to regain control and make learning a servant of pleasure and contentment. The Bible bade us test our prophets. New Year's is a good time to obey this injunction.
