Traverston

To the Editor and his better half, to his praiseworthy staff and to the ever faithful correspondents and the many appreciative readers, we extend our best wishes and greetings.

Cecil Paylor would make an ideal tree-pruner. The quick way he snips the horns off the cattle would verify that statement.

It took an hour and a half for five of us in the car to make Durham early afternoon on Saturday and the home trip was a nerve-thriller. Needless to say we recalled the lines "Oh for a glimpse of an evergreen lane and dusk and night and home again." The autos cut some queer capers on that 2nd concession.

Rev. A. W. March, despite storm and bad roads, kept his appointment at Zion. By the way, his deep interest in sick folk and earnest and instructive sermons are winning him many friends and wide appreciation.

Mrs. Hugh McArthur has been visiting with Miss Maggie McArthur on the 4th con. the past week or more.

Looking over the deaths in the Globe and Mail, issue of Dec. 12, we ran across the name "John Edward Lauder" who passed away in Peoria, Ill., on Dec. 11. It brought back memories of night 70 years ago, when he, our late brother, Will, and I all occupied the one seat in school and 'twas quite a task at writing time to find room for copy books and three extended elbows. It reminded us, also, when, one quiet afternoon, the young teacher from Durham called "Jack Lauder, Tom Jack come forward!" The big husky lad, quite unaware of what was to take place, quickly drew a new rawhide whip from his desk and gave them 14 lashes on each hand. They never flinched, but there wasn't a pupil present, but felt like lamming him out of that teacher. Years after he became a minister, rented one of Tom's homes to spend his vacation but Tom hadn't forgotten the school affair and queried the reason for the flogging. Well, he slowly replied, "I was partly to blame, the school reported as an unruly one, but 'twas a prejudiced ratepayer had advised me, if I gave you and Jack Lauder a 'good trimming', I'd have no trouble with the rest." "Well", responded Tom, "I always said to myself, if I ever get a chance I'll pay it back with interest, but seeing you're a minister and explained I'll forget it."

(Intended for Last Week) The blow fell! James Hastie, the most necessary man in this wide community and points outside, passed away Wednesday night of last week, after two months' illness following a stroke. He was the second eldest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hastie, pioneer parents on the 9th concession. He attended No. 5 school and was a bright pupil. Following school life he farmed until 22 years of age, then entered the employ of the late Isaac Elder, one of the most skilled workmen in the county. The apprentice was both eager to learn and anxious to work and graduated clever in both smithy work and in woodwork of which bobsleighs were in big demand in those days. After serving his apprenticeship he purchased all of his employer's property and for fifty-one years has won a reputation for first-class work that brought patronage from far and near. As a shoer of horses he had few equals and his honest and fair dealings with the public won him a wide circle of patronage and many friends. Fifty-four years of faithful service made a record rarely attained.

Thirty-seven years ago he was most happily wedded to Margaret Murdock and the union was blessed with three fair daughters, Irene (Mrs. William Sweeney), Elvie of Windsor and Essel, at the home and his good helper at many tasks.

The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon, a short private service being held in the home and public service in Zion. The church was filled to the doors. His pastor had one of the finest sermons we've ever heard and his tribute to the departed was a most touching, heart-warming one. The hymns were well selected and feelingly sung.

The pall-bearers were R. T. Cook, Basil Davis, Joseph R. Edwards, Edward McCarthy, James Goodwill and Albert E. McNally.

The floral tributes were most beautiful and tastefully arranged.

Those surviving besides members of the family and his beloved partner, who have so tenderly cared for him during his two months' trying illness are eight grandchildren, who will sorely miss grandpa; his elder brother, Samuel in Butte, Montana; Robert, his youngest brother and his sister Mrs. John Martin (Sarah), both of Rosedale, B. C.

The sympathy of a very wide circle of friends, neighbours and his many patrons is extended to them.

The original Hastie family has been hard it during the past nine months, three of them passing on—Mary, Mrs. George E. Peart and Jim.

Lady: "I want a nice table toy for my son." Salesman: "Table toy?" Lady: "Yes. You see, the boy's father doesn't like to kneel on the floor."

War Commentary

ican forces were launching full-scale attacks against German bridgeheads across the Roer River west of Duren, while German forces were repulsing these assaults in spirited counter-attacks, according to Berlin radio reports.

From a Canadian viewpoint, most exciting news of the week was the announcement of the part played in the cracking of the German's vaunted West Wall by a group of young French-Canadian officers. The officers were dropped by parachute into occupied France before D-Day to organize and lead bands of French Maquis in special tasks which had to be done before the main blow was struck. The men were veterans of the Sicily and Italy campaign, and all volunteered for the hazardous task.

Many were drawn from the Royal 22nd Regiment of Montreal, and a number now are back in Canada, wearing the Croix de Guerre with palms given them by the French government.

In troubled Greece, fighting has slackened off a trifle in Athens where British authorities are continuing negotiations with the Leftist E.A.M. forces in an attempt to solve the knotty problem of establishing a representative government in the recently-liberated country.

The Polish problem came to the forefront again as Prime Minister Churchill in a historic address before the British House of Commons warned that if the United States, Russia and Britain could not reach an agreement in this and other matters and would damage all hopes "for the future structure of world government."

Mr. Churchill said he had lost confidence in the reconstituted Polish government in London, and announced he would back Russia's demands for revision of the Russian-Polish boundary, giving the Soviet title to all territories east of the old Curzon Line. In return, Poland would be given all of East Prussia south and west of Konigsberg, including Danzig, so she would enjoy a 200-mile Baltic coastline.

Looks like an old-time Christmas with lots of snow. Dobbin will have to make the trip on Christmas Day and leave the car at home. Hunters will be able to track foxes and skunk which are plentiful around the lake when the chickens, geese, ducks and turkeys are on range.

F. W. Moon is doing some pumpling for Farr Lawrence this week.
