denounce a policy that there appeared so much probability of bringing to a successful issue. It is true that, while keeping quiet himself, he allowed his party newspapers to do everything in their power to discredit and embarass the British Commissioners, but for this he could easily deny personal responsibility. He Can Resist No Longer.

Tho temporary hitch that has oc cured in the deliberations however presents an opportunity which the veteran leader cannot resist, and utterly regardless of the fact that the disagreement is upon an Imperial issue, and one that Canadians have never had a word to say in hitherto, and equally regardless of the other fact that it is an issue that Sir Charles and his party have never looked upon as a probable cause of disruption, but had on the contrary selected the trade To get rid of some of the surplus however question as their piece de resistance, the committee thought it advisable to hold gloves. compel admiration, though the too obvious political bias and characteristic contempt for facts and disregard for the recognized rule of fair-fighting, may modify that admiration to a considerable degree. The British Commissioners while necessarily regretting the fact that their efforts have not met with the full measure of success that was hoped for, may rest well content that much substantial good has been done, and that the country, having an appreciative understanding of the situation, will not withhold the meed of laughs loudest who laughs last, and the Britishers' laugh is yet to come. Neither Fair Nor Honest.

A characteristic instance of the reckless unfairness of the average Opposition journal in dealing with departmental statistics that might perchance show favorably for the Government may be found in the following which appeared the other day in the Ottawa Citizen and other papers "The number of emigrants from British ports to Canada during January was : English, 331; Irish, 14; Scotch 14; and foreign, 406. To Australia there went 717, and to the Cape, 1,459 during the month." These figures would be correct if "foreign 406" is read "466" but published as they were, without note or comment, the very obvious deduction intended to be drawn by the reader here, and it is wonderful how hard he was that the improved immigration gripps. This time he has in his embrace outlook which is resulting from the nearly all of Mr. W. Greenwood's family, changes in the methods now employed Mr. W, Kenny, Mr. John Colbert and R in that branch of the service is frizzling | Timmins, Surely he will be content thin out. A fair statement would have added the following facts which are all taken from the same original return from which the Citizen got its figures: (1) The total of 825 given above as Canada's returns for the month is against 695 for January of '98; (2) the 717 destined for Australia was 846 a year ago; (3) the 1,459 that went to the Cape corresponds to 1,700 that preceeded them in January '98; (4) only 2389 Britishers started for United States ports last month as against 2698 a year ago, and (5) the total emigration of Britishers is given at 5,969 this January as against 6,639 for the first month last year.
