M. Diebler, the famous public executioner of France, has resigned his post in favor of his son. The history of the man, has, on the whole, been so romantic, and his vocation is always so Algeria, because "in his profession," peculiar a one, that a brief review of his lot and the similar existences of his The public executioner abroad kind may not be inapplicable.

Then, again, in view of the constant vacillation to which all countries are subject, the post of the public executioner is a very dangerous one. The most famous guillotiner of the French Revolution was gleefully escorted to the block by tens of thousands of the very mobs who had applauded his fiendish exhibitions, while in "Anne of Geierstein," Scot sets forth most graphically the manner in which all rabbles wait the chance to turn the tables on the wielder of

The first criminal he helped to dispatch was Ratteau, a Judge of the Criminal Court, very strange to say, a legal luminary who suffered the extreme penalty for the murder of a woman.
