Advices received in London, from the Niger contain particulars of an affair which ought to be written in letters of gold on the pages of English military

The Emir of Wasse, a cross-bred Fulay, had for a long time been renowned as a tubulent individual, always creating disturbances. Finally becoming bolder and bolder, he ordered the chief of the town of Amar to cease trading with the Niger Company. The Chief of Amar refused, whereupon the -Serikin-Duhel politely informed him that he might already consider himself wiped out, as he soon would be.

Captain McNaughton happened to be at that time in the Bautshi country, recruiting for the Imperial force. The party were on their return journey, and had arrived on the banks of the Mabokko river, which the rains had very much swollen. Four soldiers and five carriers had crossed, when sudden- packages. Just near to where our men were standing a number of bundles of trade goods which had been hurriedly abandoned by the retreating townsmen lay scattered. Several horsemen rode up and attempted to seize the goods, when our soldiers interfered, saying the goods belonged to the white men, and were not to be touched.

The Emir's people than rode down on our men, firing from the saddle. Pri-The gallant fellow, however, "fell in" his men. CAMERAS IN CHURCH.

A clergyman in England is advocating the use of a concealed camera in the pulpit, which could be snapped with a button, unknown to the congregation. This innovation, he thinks would prevent much of the snoozing in church, as the camera would take a picture of the congregation, and the sleeping ones would be caught. Then, he says, by showing these photographs to the blacksliding ones they would become so shamed that they would not be liable to repeat the performance. The suggestion is novel; but we should think that the surest way of keeping the congregation awake lies in preaching interesting sermons.
