Many stories are told of French and English soldiers in the numerous wars between the two countries drinking, smoking, chatting and generally hobnobbing in the intervals of battle. In the Pyrenees in January of 1814 the French surprised one of Hill's posts on the Adour. This was in return for the surprise of a French post by the Sixth Division under circumstances British troops at the outposts. Napier tells how the Forty-third was assembled on an open space within twenty yards of the enemy's sentry, yet the latter continued to walk his beat for an bour, relying so confidently on the customary signal that he placed his knapsack on the ground to ease his shoulders. When the order to advance was given one of the British soldiers, having told him to go away, helped him to replace his bag, and the firing then commenced. The next morning, in like manner, the French warned the Forty-third sentry to retire. A more remarkable instance happened, however, when Wellington, desirons of getting to the top of a hill occupied by the enemy near Bayonne, ordered some riflemen to drive the French away. Seeing his men stealing up too close, Wellington ordered them to fire, but with a loud voice one of the old soldiers replied, "No firing," and holding up the butt of his rifle tapped it in a peculiar way. At the wellunderstood signal, which meant, "We not maintain, would not have relinquished the post without fighting, if

SOLD WELL.

A large number of Canadian turkeys have been on sale at Blackburn this week. One of them, purchased by Inspector Turner, of the N. S. P. C. C., had attached to one of its wings an envelope addressed, "For the gentleman who buys this turkey," and containing the following letter: "Mount Elgin, Ont., Dec. 4, 1899,-Dear Friend, I hope you will enjoy the eating of this turkey. I am sure he never paid for his raising, for he was one of the biggest thieves in Canada. He is 14 months' old, and weighs 35 pounds now. We sold him for two dollars and sixty cents, or 10s 11d.
