The amount of gold brought into India during the past sixty yearsthat is to say, from 1837 to 1898is greater by three milliards nine hundred and forty-three millions of france than the amount exported. The soil of India absorbs the floods of gold just as the sands of the desert swallow the overflow of the great rivers. When it is remembered that the work of absorption has been going on with little interruption for ten centuries and still continues under our eyes it treasures that are hidden in that country. Why Hoarding Was Begun

In ancient times and up to the period of the conquest and occupation by the English individual property was not protected. The country, from one end to the other, was the prey of rival factions, who ravcame hereditary among them, so that to-day the natives do just what their ancestors did in past ages. It is estimated that milliards upon milliards of francs in gold lie buried in the hiding places of India, and it is known that this colossal treasure is in coin that dates back several centuries.

To the suffering and wretchedness that poverty ordinarily creates the natives of India add the tortures, equally painful, of an incurable avarice. That is the thing which puzzles the observer and throws him off the right track. In that country all the poor and indigent have little hiding | Modern Term for a Fop is of German | on a visit to friends in Tennessee. places, where they put away their little treasures and guard them, watching their growth and never drawing from them, even in the face of famine or dishonor, danger or death. All around them and above them are the proud and the rich, who do just as their ancestors did, and remains exactly the same as they were-that is to say, insatiable hoarders, suspicious and cruel misers. They hide their gold in the vaults of old forts and in citadels, and add to it from generation to generation, from century to century. Like that of Harpagnon, their beloved treasures possess for them charms far more fassinating than those of their immortal houris and of their enchanting peris.

THE END OF A ROMANCE.

A Story for Foolish Girls to Read and

The end of an elopement, sensation and romance has just come to light in Albany. Some years ago Emma Adriance was adopted by a wealthy aunt, who resides in Baltimore, Md. She was educated in Baltimore select schools, and when she became of age moved in the best circles, and had gentlemen admirers by the score. But she refused flattering offers, and her aunt thought Emma so much attached to her that she desired to remain her companion. This belief was suddenly dispelled, when one morning Emma and the coachman were missing. In Emma's case the old story is retold. The disappointed and irate aunt disowned her and discharged the coachman, whose name was Chas. Adriance. Soon the coachman deserted his wife, who sought work in private families as a servant. Then her health faired, and there was no one to respond to her calls for help. She was finally adjudged insane by Judge Gregory at Albany, and was taken to Poughkeepsie Hospital. There is a warning in this story. But will any foolish girl heed it ?-Buffalo

THUMPING HUBBY

Over the Shoulders of His Helpless Offspring.

The genuinely tactful married wo man of the present day doesn't portray her husband's shortcomings to him in a direct manner. She tells it all to the baby, when he is sitting in the same room. The way this scheme works was illustrated the other evening. The man and his wife had had a few words. He was sitting by the front window reading the paper, and she was goo-goo-ing to the baby in her lap.

"Yes," she crooned to the baby "its father is a nasty ill-tempered fellow, isn't he, tum-tums, and he's always snarling and growling around the house, isn't he, mamma's itty copsy-woopsy ?"

Then she glanced at the husband and father out of the corner of her eye, in order to ascertain if she had succeeded in getting a rise out of hlm. He only crackled the paper nervously, however, and went on

"And he's getting to be as stingy as a miser, too, isn't he, mamma's obysy-boybsy?" she went on, dandling the baby up and down. "And he makes a big row over every penny I spend for the house, doesn't he, mamma's pet, and he knows that I've made over the dresses I had when I married him over and over again until their nothing but rags, doesn't he, mamma's itty tipsy-wipsy?"

Again she glanced over at him to see if she had him going, but he went right on reading the same line of the same political speech for the 74th time, when she resumed-

"And he dresses himself like a nabob. doesn't he, mamma's oobsy-woohsy, and he spends more money on drink from her food. There is someand cigars than he lets me have for a week's grocery bills, and goodness thing wrong; it is either her food gracious only knows what keeps him out until about two o'clock in the morning three nights in the week, and he treats baby's itty g'anmother very badly, and he never has a civil word for anybody, and he is beginning to drink like a fish, and to neglect and hate his family, isn't he, mamma's opsy-wopsy ?"

"Say," broke in the husband and father at this point, throwing down his paper. "that's a pretty way for it is death, be quick! you to talk to me, isn't it ?" She looked at him with an expression of intense surprise. "I haven't said a word to you," she said, in a wrongfully accused tone, "I was only talking to bahy. I suppose you will permit me to talk to my own baby, won't you?"
