WHERE CONFUCIUS SLEEPS. Honor Paid by Chinese to the Venerated Sage's Grave.

A visit to the tomb of Confucius is the chief incident described in Ernst von Hesse-Wartegg's article on "China's Holy Land," in the October Century.

Twenty-six centuries have elapsed since this mound was erected, thousands of millions of sons of Han have lived and died, and still the teachings of the great man form the bible of this most numerous nation on earth. He has impressed his religion and his code of morals on a third of the entire population of the globe; but all these millions, from the long line of emperors down to the present day, worship him not as a god, but as a man. They erected no gorgeous temples for sacred shrines over his grave, and no relies of Confucius are worshiped, like the piece of ivory which in the temple of Kandy represents the tooth of Buddha, or the hair from the head of Mohammed in the Mosque of Kairwan. Competition, the Spur.

Socialism is not a practical solution of the problem of organization for a modern industrial State. A State so organized, with the spur of individual initiative removed, and wth the natural inventors and captains of industry confounded in the ranks of co-operative laborers, would steadily drift behind her rivals, organized upon the competitive system, until poverty, social disorganization and the flight of the best blood to other countries would drive her rapidly along the road to industrial decay and social barbarism.-New York Journal of Commerce.

Valuable Advice to Rhuematics.

Eat meat sparingly, also very little sugar, avoid damp feet, drink water abundantly, and always rely on Nerviline as an absolute reliever of pain. Five times stronger than any other, its power over pain is simply beyond belief. Get a bottle at your druggists, test it, and see if it is not so. Medicine dealers sell it everywhere.

He was out walking with a young lady who had a decided antipathy to cigarettes, but not being aware of her prejudice he lighted one of the little rolls and began smoking with great gusto, inhaling the fumes deep into his lungs and then blowing great rings up at the moon, which gazed tranquilly down on his folly. Offended by his presumption, she said with dangerous urbanity-"Do you know I can read fortunes in cigarette smoke?" "Indeed," exclaimed the unsuspecting youth, "perhaps you'll conde-

CURIOUS TYPE OF CRANKS.

Those Who Confess Crimes they Never Committed Aunoy the Police.

"The most curious type of crank the world, in my humoie opinion,' said an old police officer, 'is the fel-low who makes a fake confession. The outside public has no idea how frequently that sort of thing occurs. Whenever we have a murder mystery the authorities are absolutely certain to hear from one or more people who assert positively that they have committed the crime and whose stories are generally self-evident fabrications. As a rule the confession crank writes a letter and now and then the communications are so plausible and circumstantial that the police would be thrown completely off the track were it not for the fact that they are always on their guard for just that kind of false leads. It is very strange, and there seems to be absolutely no motive beyond an insane passion for meddling. Occasionally the crank will present himself in person and insist upon being locked up, but his first few words , Oil. will usually betray him, and unless he is violent he is quietly escorted to the door. A very singular incident of that kind took place seven or eight years ago in connection with a mysterious murder in the "Tenderloin" district. "One evening a young man who be longed to an excellent family of this city called at headquarters and astonished everybody by declaring he had committed the crime. A little questioning showed that his story could not possibly be true, and finally he admitted that he was lying. My curiosity was highly excited, and, taking him to one side, I tried draw from him the reason that had prompted such an extraordinary and dangerous piece of folly. He told me, with hysterical tears, that he had brooded about the case and found a you'll pay for it. strange and pleasurable excitement in 'making believe' that he was the man who had done the deed. That grew upon him until, I suppose, it became next door to an hallucination. At any rate, he could give no other explanation. Of course, such a man should have been placed under restraint as a dangerous monomaniae, but the police have no facilities for handling cases of this kind, and the family were averse to sending him to an asylum. I see him frequently on the streets. Some few false confessions are made for the deliberate purpose of misleading the authorities, and, again, they are sometimes | free sample, its amade by prisoners solely to secure a transfer to another city.
