THE UNIVERSITY DISCUSSION.

Nobody, not even the university authorities, ever desired seriously to remove the University of Toronto from Government control. In fact, a measure prepared a couple of years ogo, was never brought up in the Legislature because the friends of the uni versity-some of whom had been rather clamorous that way-did not like the idea so well when it was set down in black and white. At the present time there has been no effort to upset Premier Ross, argument that the Government must retain a measure of control so long as the Government is responsible to the people for endowment funds other university matters.

The real question is, has the Government done enough for the University: Is the financial aid adequate? Is it wisely directed? In the last ten years the Government has given to the University | the path is clear. Truly the gallant $450,000, or what represents that amount capitalized at four per cent This means a contribution of $45,000, Now on top of it comes another gift of $20,000 a year—the maintenance of the most expensive department of university instruction, and a $200,000 building. Such a record can hardly be called Dutch alike. The hope of every mind niggardly. Under these circumstances public opinion will be with the Govern- less resistance which is wasting the Handmade Boots and Shoes for Men | ment in helping the University just | stricken land may come speedily, so Women and Children. Try a pair if enough to help itself. There are many that the good work of building up legitimate calls on the public treasury, the whole educational system. There are 6,000 public schools, 130 high schools, a large number of Model schools, Normal schools, a Normal College, besides technical schools and agricultural and dairying schools which must have a share in these givings. The University is, perhaps, the most important factor in the educational scheme, butjeven that could not condone the Government in losing sight of proportion in distributing the public money. As a matter of fact the Government has not only kept this in mind, but has actually given the University all it asked, though some pernickety people do not choose to see it in that light.

THE ROSS RAILWAY POLICY.

In its railway policy the Ross Govabreast of the time. It has always been quick to anticipate public senti-ment and alert to implement it when that sentiment was healthy. Perhaps no executive body has kept such a careful gauge of public opinion, or has steered so wise a course among many conflicting elements. In this stage of our development, Ontario needs railways, and railways need capital to build them. Without discouraging capital, the Ross Government has vet pretty clear field. At Ottawa, they are not prepared to take the public ownership of railways into immediate favor, although they seem to be swinging round gradually to that direction.

Of course the railway question in Ontario is not such a large subject as it is at Ottawa. The Dominion Government is tackling the subject bravely, but they have a legacy of mistakes rom the Conservative regime which omplicate the problem to some extent.

At Toronto, Premier Ross is more enterprising. He has only Ontario to consider, and as tar as as Ontario is concerned he has discerned a growing sentiment for public ownership and a publish it in full. It is decidedly pretty deep-seated one for Government interesting to read personal experiences control of railways. ring the full note of that patriotism of proof. Further Canadian troops would not be sent to South Africa, he said but simply because they were not now required. As to enlistment for the constabulary, what kind of championship deny to British subjects the right to serve the King? With firm touch he swept away the suggestions that there was an alternative to the annexation of the conquered territories. He pointed out that the responsibility for all that has befallen the Boers rested with ex-President Kruger. From the launching of the ultimatam the Boers themselves made the struggle one for the supremacy in South Africa. They appealed to the wager of battle, and must abide by the result. The Boer leaders by their own action laid down the issue of the conflict. In the hour of their first successes British territory was annexed. But for the turn of the tide the process would have continued. The future peace of South Africa would b: an impossibility were any shadow of doubt to be allowed to remain on the question of the predominant power. And from Sir Wilfrid Laurier comes with unrivalled force the description of how, beneath the shadow of the British flag, that future curries the assurances of freedom indeed. A federated South Africa on the model of the Cana dian Confederation will be built up. The sores of war cannot, indeed, be healed in a day; racial animosities may take some time to die down. But lives that have been sacrificed and the treasure that has been poured out so treely will not have been spent in vain in laying the foundations of all that may yet be brought to pass. Under the British flag, in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's words, there will be equality for all, justice and civil rights for British and
