Priceville.

A cool breeze on Saturday afternoon last gave decided change in the atmosphere, and on Sunday people could be seen with their overcoats and mitts on. Seeding is almost done with the exception of some late barleys and such like. Early sown grain looks well and is already partly covering the ground. Fall wheat never had better appearance at this season of this year.

Our town is a little quiet at present owing to the busy season, but nevertheless people take the advantage of coming out in the evenings for business and our good business men are always ready and obliging to attend to their various demands.

We have quite a number of retired farmers as citizens whom we heartily welcome and we feel proud for that class of people who have won for themselves by hard and honest toil while filling the soil, means and ways to support them in their declining years, and now we deem it an honor to have them swell the number of inhabitants in our enterprising town. It is an easy matter to be fault-finding, but if those who engage themselves in such work from time to time, merely for the sake of making themselves busy-bodies, would make more endeavors to find a more lucrative employment, they would not be gapping with their mouths wide open expecting bread to be showered down upon them from the heavens without taking any heed to the command given—"thou shalt earn thy bread with the sweat of thy brow."

The sick in some instances are getting better, but some are yet far from being well. Miss Christina McDonald (Hugh) who we reported in our last budget as being about well after a severe attack of illness, is again similarly affected and is lying at her uncle's, Mr. James McDonald, at the Townline, Arden, where she receives the best of care and treatment. We hope to see this young lady around again in usual health and activity. Her brother, John, who had some of his fingers taken off is doing well. We sympathize with Mr. McDonald in having his son and daughter laid up at the same time.

We are sorry to hear that one of our town boys, John Cameron, met with such a severe accident at the Durham factory by having the fingers taken off.

Mr. McCabe was away for a couple of weeks down to his old home. During his absence Mr. Neil McKinnon looked after the store here.

Quarterly meeting was held in the Methodist church here on the 5th inst.

At the recent election for elders in the Presbyterian church here, Messrs. James Fauss, John Nichol Sr. and Duvald McCornick were chosen. We are not in a position to say whether these gentlemen will accept the position or not.

Rural Plain.

Mr. Editor,—Since sending you an introductory note a few weeks ago, we have been very busy. Ours is a rural district and the citizens of all rural districts, forget the covetous feelings they entertain towards you town-fellows (because you have everything so convenient) for a few weeks at this particular time of the year, because unless you sow you cannot expect to reap. And since it necessarily follows, that you must plough and harrow to complete the sowing, we people of the "Plain" who desire to reap have little time to think of aught else save our seeding, although I hear some people say that there are a great many people in town who reap the benefit of what we sow, "well, be that as it may," there is no idle hands in "Rural Plains" just now.

It gave me much pleasure and encouragement to read my first letter to a newspaper, in THE REVIEW last week, also to notice that you, Mr. Editor, referred to my first communication as being not bad for a start. I had expected to see all your old and regular correspondents, jump onto my little composition and dissect it and ridicule it in divers many ways, but no, "they didn't do it," that also gave me encouragement, and since silence is indicative of consent, I feel that they are satisfied to permit me to join the ranks of the "local correspondents," and become one of them. Yes, it escaped criticism from all except one, "the 'Midway Cor.' to the Hanover Post," (and he says he's a farmer too.) He said he sympathized with "Truth-seeker," from Rural Plains, in his backward locality, and did not appear to appreciate the invitation I extended him to come down to the "Plain." He feared he might wind up on the "Plains of Abraham." Well, if he goes to Hanover very often I don't wonder at him being a trifle scared of the "Plains," because they knock people down with plaves there. We hear that even the Reeve of that town does not escape from the plaves, and that quite recently one of the citizens struck him on the head with a plane and that it was a plain knock-down and out for 30 minutes. But the "Midway" man, after sympathizing with us, then informs us that if we have any good news to tell him, he would be pleased to give us a hearing, but if on the contrary we had any troubles to unburden, he advised us to dump them out on the Plains, as they had troubles enough in "Midway." "The old, old story," discord, disruption, disunion, among the farmers, I always said that's what keeps us farmers poor, we rejoice at each others misfortunes, and are not united enough, and then those town-fellows they form combines and syndicates and rings and pools and all those things we read about, and they agree among themselves, to do so and so, and they do-do so and so, and they watch for a farmer and when he comes to town, he's a lone bird and he gets into the ring, and he remains till the ring agrees to let him go home. If he brought in a load of wheat he had to take the town price, and if he brought home a load of shoes, overalls, straw hats, groceries, etc., he had to pay the town price. "So you see," Mr. Editor, I was thinking over these things and was wanting to discuss the advisability and propriety, of promoting more sociability and union among the farmers, and thought perhaps the "Midway Farmer," would be a good subject to reveal my little plan to, but he has blasted by first hopes and caused me to feel a little discouraged by telling me to dump my troubles on the Plains, for they have troubles "galore" in his town. Well, since "Misery loves company," I feel easier now, I thought we were alone.

However, we're getting enlightened in here on the Plain lately, and since we started reading the newspapers we are finding out a lot of things. I would like if some of your other correspondents from rural districts would suggest some method of getting the farmers to be more sympathetic to each other, they may be more successful than I have been. I believe even the printers have an association of some kind, in which they recognize each other's rights, although I heard a printer say very recently that the editor of a paper had no rights, and that even if a subscriber to his journal was in arrears for five years, the editor had no right to stop his paper. But even there if that printer never got that arrears, he got the sympathy of his brother printers and he's not so badly fixed as the farmer would be after all.

I was going to send you some personal items but will defer that to another time. We are not accustomed to seeing our names in print and must approach the matter cautiously.

As ever, "TRUTH-SEEKER,"
