FIGHT WITH BENGAL TIGER

Arthur Spencer, who is in charge of the large menagerie which each year spends the winter months in Geneva. O., is one of the best known animal trappers and trainers in America at the present time. While he is yet a young man, his life has been full of experiences, any one of which would entitle him to notice. He has traveled in all portions of the globe, routed almost every animal of ganisms,' I went on rapidly, bracing the earth from his native lair and my feet against the table to give had enough hair-breadth escapes to cause him to either shudder at the distilled water. W SOURCE CONTRACTOR AND PARTY OF THE

After the hour of training recently, when complimented for his remarkable work with animals and the ease with which he subdued the most hostile of man's enemies, he leaned back in his chair at the winter quarters and smiled at the thought of his thus exhibiting bravery. He then related an adventure which he considers one of the most thrilling of his life, and which a beautiful fur rug in his mother's home in Australia proves its truth-but truth always too remarkable for the human mind to comprehend.

It happened several years ago, when Mr. Spencer was in India. It was before the advent of railroads in that part of the country near Allahabad, which was an almost impenetrable jungle and abounding in all kinds of large game. It was in the day when whole villages in the vicinity would be sick at heart over the report that a Bengal tiger, the terror of the Indian jungles, had been seen. At the receipt of such intelligence crops would be abandoned, other outdoor work left incomglected until the animal was killed This condition of affairs made a tiger hunt not only a sport but a public necessity. The natives, however, were armed with the most primitive weapons and in time of trouble usually waited the appearance of a bunting party to which they would join themselves as escort and assistants.

Just after a big tiger had carried off a couple of children and a woman from one of the little villages near Allahabad, Mr. Spencer arrived at the place with a party of hunters who were looking for leopards. Many might attract the animal, but this was in vain, for a beast that has once tasted human flesh will not again touch anything else. As they protection of the hunting party a will come in sight of the mighty ob- and before the very eyes of his wife years in the jungle, were apparently ence was one which they did not

At daybreak the next morning the party started. They worked according to a plan made the night before, that the hunters should separate and beat the entire country about the village. Spencer, auxious for an adventure, chose as his beat an old water course, knowing that the Bengal tiger, while resting, is usually to be found at the edge of a forest and near a stream. He had followed the stream for as much as a mile without any intimation of danger when he suddenly heard a rustle in a clump of bamboos, and before he could raise his rifle a big animal shot through the air and struck him heavily on the shoulders. He was rendered senseless by the shock, and when he recovered his mind he found

After going half a mile the animal stopped, listened, dropped his victim and then lay down beside him, much as a cat does with a mouse. Spencer had two revolvers and a knife strapped to his waist belt, but he dared not move enough to release them. While he lay there, expecting that each moment might be his last, it came to his mind that in his side pocket he had a good-sized package of cayenne pepper, which is always carried by experienced jungle beaters. With a coolness born of desperation he slowly passed his hand into his pocket and reached the coveted powder. As he released the package the tiger opened its jaws and growled, and with its eyes glaring furiously was about to grasp its victim again when he threw a handful of red pepper full in its eyes and mouth. The beast was immediately frenzied with ly, but allowing Spencer to creep loom were of a waggish turn, there away on account of blindness. are regarded generally as the prizes in the cierical profession, as has been so plainly shown of late by changes at some of the local churches. To be minister in one of the city's big churches is a lucrative and desirable position. The salaries are large and the perquisites often amount to as much again as the salaries. It is said the late Dr. John Hall had an income of between $55,000 and $60.000 a year, of which his salary amounted to only $25,000, the balance being made up from marriage fees and other incidentals. Dr. Morgan Dix, of Trinity, receives a salary of $25,-000 and his perquisites amount to quite as much more as did Dr. Hall's. Dr. Dix has also about twenty assistant curates, none of whom gets less than $2,500 yearly. Not less than the income of either Dr. Hall or Dr. Dix, is the income of Dr. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, for besides a large salary, he officiates at more fashionable weddings than any other minister in New York. Dr. Huntington, of Grace Church, probably comes third on the list of high-priced ministers. Dr. McArthur, of Calvary Church, is the best-paid Baptist minister in the city, although his salary are thrown in with the large to a rich city church is not to be despised.
