TALKS WITH WOMEN.

Madame Qui Vive's Advice to Her Sisters.

There is nothing in the world much more interesting than a clever, bright, wholly alive woman of keen wit and charming manners.

There is nothing on earth so tiresome and so wearying as the woman who affects vivacity, chews her fingers in ecquettish playfulness, giggles, giggles, giggles and says nothing but talks always.

Were I a man and married to one of these-but I will not reveal what I should do, says Mme, Qui Vive, in the Record Herald.

Anyone ein appreciate a woman of etron; personality and plenty of natural animation. The whole worlllk s the woman who is wel. poised, who is equal to emergencies, who thinks befor she speaks and who is capable of passing judgment without fault other thin these human mistakes that are so natural for the best of us. Often a woman of this type is crisp in her speech and brimful of pleasant, harmless reportee. It is a pleasure to know such a woman, it is a blessing to have such a woman for a friend. Everyone who meets her feels intuitively the inspiration of her companionsh p. She is delightful to talk with, "darling" to walk with, and the best kind of a friend to know, ing list now, No matter how effervescing her

She is as refreshing as an early morning in the woods, when the grass blades sparkle with dewdiamond settings and the world is awakening to a glorious day. She is never uninteresting. To her stupidity and kittenishnesss are an equal bore. She is vivacious, but the vivacity is always wholesome and rational.

But that other type of woman, the teresting is to be a simpering, tit- he could have the courage. tering silly! She tattles her pointless nonsense just because she must ever needs be tattling. And, half an hour afterwards she stops to think. There is nothing quite so deto-morrow. It is a frailty that is largely monopolized by the dear sisterhood, and it is an error of conduct from which they should separate themselves.

To be bright is not necessarily to you can't prevent." talk all the time. Most women talk "Then, Hiram, why don't you shut too much, anyway. To be bright is up?" to keep still until you have something to say, that is worth saying. Keen repartee at the expense of some other individual is always in bad taste. Harmless fun and simple nonsense are what keeps the world wagging in its fine old way. Be serions in serious affairs, but keep your heart light with a little healthy frivolity - the kind that is as pleasant to others as it is soul-cheering to one's self. Have you ever met a woman who let you do the talking, and who opened her mouth only when she had something mighty entertaining to say? She's the kind of a woman pompouned sailor toward the azure country to beg? negative of her and hang it in your in no time at all. heart. It will ever be a helpful inspiration toward acquiring that excellent combination-dignity and mental sparkle. The trouble is that few women know just where to draw the line in their spasms of mental vivacity. It isn't so much what you say, either, as how you say it. What may sound extremely charming from one woman may be fearfully common from another. Let me tell you a little secret. Every night when you say your prayers, add this little line: "Dear God, help me to cultivate the soul of a gentlewoman." Then all these things will straighten themselves out. Have the manners, the speech, the soft voice and the ladylike poise of a gentlewoman. You are equipped then for a life that is properly ballasted.

PINK LINGERIE.

Wonders of the Trousseau of a French

Princess. One of the innumerable French princesses has created something of trousseauing herself with a complete set of pink lingerie, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

In this noble bridal outfit there are sets in pink silk, sets in pink dimity, in pink lawn, in pink nainsook and in a fine pink muslin. The shades chosen are old rose, blush rose. Each set consists of six pieces, which include two petticoats, one the little underskirt called a "modesty petticoat"; a corset cover makes a third, a chemise the fourth, a nightgown the fifth. Pink corsets of silk, of satin, coutille, of ribbon, of straps of silk braid and lace and little "corsettles" of lace, with ribbon along the top and along the lower edge, for wear with an empire waist, are found in

In this country pink has long been the favorite color in the feminine world. It is the wedding shade, and the color that young women choose for evening, while matrons who study its good cheer do not forget its enlivening tones.

But it is pink in its softest glows that is selected for the color of underwear. There is a blush rose nainsook which in nightgowns is simply delightful. It should be fancifully made and trimmed with ribbons and of powder are pretty with silver lace; for any color, no matter how cheerful it may be, needs the enliv- grams. ening effect of white

A pink nainsook nightgown was cut with pointed neck front and back. The neck was finished with white tace. Below the lace there was a ruffle of the pink, and then came a chou of pink ribbon, one at each side of the point in the neck, and each finished with streamers of ribbon.
